Office-Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
JAN 2 1963
JOHN F. DAVIS, CLERK

In The

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM 1962

No. 711

National Bulk Carriers, Inc., in personam, and the SS "BULKCRUDE", in rem, Petitioners,

v.

Mrs. Valerie Jean Gardner, as Administratrix of the Estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., Deceased, Respondent.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

AND APPENDIX

R. Arthur Jett
Roy L. Sykes
R. Arthur Jett, Jr.
Counsel for Petitioners

Jett, Sykes & Coupland
701 Citizens Bank Building
Norfolk 10, Virginia

INDEX

Page

Citation to Opinions Below 2

Jurisdiction 2

Questions Presented:

FIRST: Whether The Amended Majority Opinion Of The Court Of Appeals Violates The Doctrine Enunciated By This Court In McAllister v. United States, 348 U.S., 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L. Ed. 20 2

SECOND: Whether The Amended Majority Opinion Of The Court Of Appeals Is In Conflict With Miller v. Farrell Lines, (2 Cir. 1957), 247 F. (2d) 503, Certiorari Denied 355 U.S. 912, 78 S. Ct. 342, and Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., (5 Cir. 1961) 209 F. (2d) 310 2

Statutes Involved 3

Statement of the Case 3

Reasons for Granting the Writ:

FIRST: The Majority Opinion Of The Fourth Circuit Completely Ignores McAllister v. United States (1954) 348 U.S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 61, 99 L. Ed. 20 16

SECOND: The Decision Below Conflicts With The Decision Of The Second Circuit In Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F. (2d) 503, Certiorari Denied 355 U. S. 912, 78 S. Ct. 342, And The Decision Of The Fifth Circuit In Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., 290 F. (2d) 310 23

Conclusion 35

CITATIONS

Page

Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., (5 Cir. 1961) 290 F. (2d) 310 ..... 14, 26, 34
Gardner v. National Bulk Carriers, Inc., 305 F. (2d) 515 2
Harris v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (4 Cir. 1931), 50 F. (2d) 866 10
McAllister v. United States, (1954) 348 U.S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L. Ed. 20 ..... 15, 16, 21, 22
Miller v. Farrell Lines, (2 Cir. 1957) 247 F. (2d) 503, certiorari denied 355 U. S. 912 ..... 14, 23, 34

STATUTES

28 United States Code Annotated, Section 1254(1) 2
45 United States Code Annotated, Section 51, et seq. 3
46 United States Code Annotated, Section 688 3

INDEX TO APPENDIX

District Court Opinion 1

Fourth Circuit Opinions
- A. First Opinion 9
- B. Amended Majority Opinion 18
- C. Dissenting Opinion 26

Testimony
- A. Captain Edwin B. Ing 31
- B. Captain John R. McIntyre 35
- C. Captain Walter N. Prengel 37
- D. Captain Harold B. Adams 38
- E. Captain Glen Chaffin 39
- F. Chief Warrant Officer Ernest E. Fuller 41

Title 46 U. S. Code Sec. 688 42

In The

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM 1962

No. .....

National Bulk Carriers, Inc., in personam, and the SS "BULKCRUDE", in rem, Petitioners,

v.

Mrs. Valerie Jean Gardner, as Administratrix of the Estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., Deceased, Respondent.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

Petitioners in the above entitled cause pray that a writ of certiorari issue to review the amended majority opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, filed pursuant to an order entered in said cause on October 26, 1962.

CITATION TO OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, Norfolk Division, exonerating petitioners is reported at 190 F. Supp. 143. It is printed at pages 1-9 in the appendix hereto. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, in two opinions, reversed and remanded. Its first opinion is reported in the advanced sheets of the Federal Reporter, Second Series, at 305 F. (2d) 515. It is printed at page 9 in the appendix hereto. This opinion is not reported in the bound volume of 305 F. (2d). In that publication under the caption "Cases Reported" appears the following: "Gardner v. National Bulk Carriers, Inc., 305 F. (2d) 515. Withdrawn by Order of Court." Its amended majority opinion and the dissenting opinion, as of this time, are unreported. They are printed in the appendix to this petition, the amended majority opinion at page 18 and the dissenting opinion of Circuit Judge Haynsworth at page 26.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 United States Code Annotated, Section 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

This petition for a writ of certiorari presents two basic questions which petitioners submit are of vital interest and should be considered and passed upon by this Court, in order that there may be unanimity in future decisions.

FIRST: Whether the amended majority opinion of the Court of Appeals violates the doctrine enunciated by this Court in McAllister v. United States, 348 U.S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L. Ed. 20.

SECOND: Whether the amended majority opinion of the Court of Appeals is in conflict with Miller v. Farrell Lines, (2 Cir. 1957), 247 F. (2d) 503, certiorari denied 355 U.S. 912, 78 S. Ct. 342, and Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., (5 Cir. 1961) 290 F. (2d) 310.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The principal statute involved is 46 United States Code Annotated, Section 688, known as the Jones Act (appendix page 42), which incorporates the provisions of 45 United States Code Annotated, Section 51, et seq. (known as the Federal Employers Liability Act or F. E. L. A.), thus making the F. E. L. A. applicable to shipowners and merchant seaman.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an action in admiralty involving "search and rescue", brought pursuant to the provisions of Section 33 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, commonly known as the "Jones Act", Title 46, United States Code Annotated, Section 688, wherein the administratrix of the estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., brought suit against National Bulk Carriers, Inc., owner of the Steamship "BULKCRUDE", in personam, and the Steamship "BULKCRUDE", in rem, to recover for the death of her decedent. Petitioners were the respondents appellees in the Court of Appeals. The appendix to petitioners' brief filed with the Court below, sometimes referred to in this petition as "Respondents'—Appellees' Appendix (Bulkcrude)", is included in the "Transcript of Record" sent to this Court by the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Petitioners' "Petition for Rehearing" filed with the Court of Appeals is also included in the said "Transcript of Record."

The evidence was heard by the District Court over a five-day period ending on October 12, 1960, the greater part of which was taken in open court, thereby giving the District Judge an opportunity to observe the demeanor of the witnesses. Basically there was little conflict in the testimony offered on behalf of libellant and respondents.

Gardner signed aboard the "BULKCRUDE" for the voyage in question on December 4, 1958, at New York, in the capacity of A.B. seaman. He was assigned to the 12 to 4 watch, serving thereon each day from midnight to 4:00 A.M., and from noon to 4:00 P.M. On December 8, 1958, at 2330 (11:30 P.M.), while the vessel was proceeding along the Florida Straits, Gardner, when called to report for his midnight watch, could not be located. In the forenoon of that day Gardner had appeared at the office of the master of the "BULKCRUDE" and reported that he felt shaky. He explained that he had previously done quite a bit of drinking, was suffering from the effects thereof, and was considering leaving the vessel for a medical check-up upon its arrival at Corpus Christi. Captain Chaffin, master of the "BULKCRUDE", supplied Gardner with medicines and directed that he be relieved of his afternoon watch, 1200 to 1600 hours (noon to 4:00 P.M.) on December 8, and also his night watch, 0000 to 0400 hours (midnight to 4:00 A.M.) December 9, 1958; however, Gardner later advised that he would stand his midnight watch. Gardner had last been seen by his forecastle mates at about 1800 (6:00 P.M.) December 8. A thorough search of the vessel which was promptly made, commencing at 11:30 P.M., December 8, 1958, and completed at 0100 (1:00 A.M.) December 9, 1958, failed to locate Gardner. At 0040 (12:40 A.M.) December 9, prior to the completion of the search, the master of the "BULK-CRUDE" sent the following wireless message to the Coast Guard at Miami, Florida, which was received by the Coast Guard at 0054 (12:54 A.M.) December 9:

> "Seaman Robert E. Gardner missing from the SS Bulkcrude KBXM Last seen about 1800 Vicinity Tennessee Reef 24-42 N 80-44 W Stop First Missed at 2330 when called for watch All searches have been to no avail Please advise Chaffin master."

The Coast Guard at Miami radioed the following reply at 0105 (1:05 A.M.) December 9:

> "SS Bulkcrude Will issue broadcast to all shipping vicinity to be on lookout in case seaman went overboard Commander Seventh Coast Guard District."

The Coast Guard then made the following emergency "All Ships Broadcast" at 0117 (1:17 A.M.) December 9, and repeated the same at its regular broadcasts twice thereafter:

> "All shiping Straits of Florida SS Bulkcrude advises seaman missing X Last seen on board about 082300Z vicinity Tennessee Reef 24-42 N 80-44 W X Keep sharp lookout possible man overboard Commander Seventh Coast Guard District."

When navigating in tropical waters, it is common practice for crew members to sleep on deck or elsewhere rather than in their quarters, which in this instance was the forecastle. Therefore, the "BULKCRUDE" was not stopped while the search for Gardner was made, and such action is not customary. See Respondents'—Appellees' Appendix (Bulkcrude) as follows:

Captain McIntyre pages 43 and 44

Captain Prengel pages 79 and 80

Captain Adams pages 91 and 92

Between 1800 (6:00 P.M.) December 8, when Gardner was last seen, and 2330 (11:30 P.M.) December 8, when he was first missed, a period of 5½ hours, the vessel had travelled a distance of 85 miles, and between 1800 (6:00 P.M.) December 8, when he was last seen, and 0100 (1:00 A.M.) December 9, when the search of the vessel was completed, a period of 7 hours, the vessel had travelled a distance of 105 miles on a dark night through coastal waters with strong varying currents. See Respondents'-Appellees' Appendix (Bulkcrude) as follows:

Captain McIntyre page 35

Captain Prengel page 76

Captain Adams page 87

District Court's Opinion page 148

See also Dissenting Opinion of Circuit Judge Haynsworth, page 26 of appendix to this petition.

At the completion of the search of the vessel a conference was held by the master of the "BULKCRUDE" with his chief mate. After fully considering all of the pertinent facts including the lapse of time since Gardner was last seen, the distance the ship had travelled during this interval, the darkness of the night, that no one knew when or where Gardner went overboard, if at all, and that at some points along the vessel's route since Gardner was last seen the drift of the current was offshore and at others it was inshore, it was decided that there would be no reasonable possibility of locating Gardner by turning the vessel around and attempting a search of the waters while retracing a reciprocal or parallel course, even if he had survived the many known dangers to be encountered by going overboard, including, among others, contact with the vessel's propeller and attack by sharks and barracuda, numerous in that area. Eight witnesses testified as to whether or not, on the facts in this case, there would have been a reasonable possibility of rescuing Gardner, had the vessel been turned back and a search conducted, either at 11:30 P.M., when he was first missed or at 1:00 A.M., December 9, when search of the vessel was completed and he could not be located, six for respondent and two for libellant.

The witnesses testifying on behalf of the respondent were well qualified masters with experience in matters of this kind and all were positive that it would have been useless for the master of the "BULKCRUDE" to turn back and conduct a search after Gardner had been reported missing because there was no reasonable possibility of rescuing him, under the conditions that existed that night.

The Coast Guard Watch Officer in Miami, who received the message from the master of the "BULKCRUDE" that Gardner was missing, testified that he did not order a search for Gardner because it was night and because it was not known when or where Gardner went overboard.

Two witnesses testified for libellant on this point. One was Captain Edwin B. Ing, United States Coast Guard, who was Chief of the Search and Rescue Section for the Fifth Coast Guard District, comprising the States of Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina and the waters adjacent thereto, and the other was Stanley Livingston, a retired tugboat captain, who so far as the record shows, was without experience in situations involving rescue at sea. The testimony of libellant's witness, Captain Ing, fully supported that of the experts testifying for respondents, that is, that on the facts in this case, there was no reasonable possibility of rescuing Gardner had the master of the "BULKCRUDE" turned back and attempted a search. Captain Ing further testified that, had he been Watch Officer for the Coast Guard at Miami when the message from the master of the "BULKCRUDE" was received, he would not have ordered a search for Gardner because of the low probability of finding him, and such search as might have been ordered the next day would not have been an extensive one. He further testifid that it would have been practically impossible to see a man in the water at night unless the man was equipped with special signalling equipment.

The above left the libellant with no testimony in support of her contention that the master of the "BULKCRUDE", upon learning that Gardner was missing, should have turned the vessel around and attempted a search, except Captain Livingston, the retired tugboat captain. After testifying that he believed if the vessel had turned back that night the probabilities of finding the missing seaman were good, Captain Livingston so qualified this conclusion as to make it completely worthless. He testified, (petitioners' ("BULKCRUDE's") petition for rehearing, page 23) as follows:

> "As long as that man is alive and he's wiggling in the water; it seems to me like he'd be able to do it almost as well at night as you could in the day."

There was no evidence that the missing seaman was alive and wiggling in the water. Captain Livingston also admitted the serious effect of the varying currents in that area, stating that if an object went into the water which did not immediately sink, there was no way of knowing its drift unless you knew approximately where it went overboard, (petitioners' ("BULKCRUDE's") petition for rehearing, page 23). There was no evidence as to where or when Gardner went overboard, or that he went overboard at all. Therefore, basically Livingston's testimony supported the experts testifying for this petitioner and the testimony of libellant's expert, Captain Ing, of the Coast Guard.

On December 29, 1960, the District Court, the Honorable Walter E. Hoffman, who had seen and heard the witnesses testify, concluded that on the record in this case, there would have been no reasonable possibility of rescuing Gardner had the "BULKCRUDE" been turned back and a search conducted; that there was no negligence on the master, and that the libel should be dismissed. The District Court, in its opinion, at page 8 of the appendix to this petition, said:

> "Holding that, under the peculiar facts of this case, the master of the 'BULKCRUDE' was not negligent in failing to reverse his course for the purpose of conducting a search, and that, in any event, there was no reasonable possibility of success and, hence, there was no causal relations between the negligence, if any, and the death, a decree will be entered dismissing the libel."

In reaching this conclusion the District Court relied upon and quoted from Harris v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (4 Cir. 1931) 50 F. (2d) 866, where at pages 868 and 869, Judge Soper, in speaking for the Fourth Circuit, said:

> "These obvious facts lead us to conclude that there was evidence of neglect on the part of the crew, and further that it was for the jury to decide whether the man could have been saved if due diligence had been used. * * *. Whether in any event he would have succeeded is not a certainty, but in our view there was enough testimony tending to show a reasonable probability of rescue, had a life ring or heaving line been used, to justify the submission of the question to the jury." (Italics supplied).

Nothing could be plainer than that the Fourth Circuit in Harris v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra, relied upon in the instant case by the District Court and the Court of Appeals as well, holds that in cases of this type, the question of whether there was a reasonable probability of rescue is for the jury to decide. In this admiralty case the findings of the District Court as trier of the facts were equivalent to those of a jury.

From the decree of the District Court dismissing the libel the libellant appealed.

October 10, 1961, the Circuit Court of Appeals, three judges sitting, first heard argument. No opinion was rendered by that Court.

May 28, 1962, pursuant to an order duly entered, the case was reargued before the Circuit Court of Appeals, five judges sitting en banc. Judge Soper who was the author of the opinion in the Harris case in which the doctrine of search and rescue first originated, and who sat on the three judge Court which did not render an opinion in the instant case, was not a member of the en banc Court which finally acted.

July 31, 1962, the Court of Appeals filed its first opinion. The en banc Court after expressly approving the doctrine laid down by Judge Soper in the Harris case that before the defendant can be held liable there must be a reasonable probability of rescue and such question is for the jury, reversed the findings of the District Court that on the evidence in this case there was no reasonable possibility or probability of rescuing Gardner. A petition for a rehearing was timely filed on behalf of petitioners.

October 26, 1962, the Court of Appeals, after considering the aforesaid petition for rehearing, denied the same, filed an amended opinion correcting numerous errors in its first opinion, but nevertheless reversed the District Court. Simultaneously therewith Circuit Judge Haynsworth, a member of the said Court, filed a dissenting opinion.

Listed below are the pertinent changes made by the Court of Appeals in its amended majority opinion:

FIRST OPINION	AMENDED OPINION
(1) Page 2 (See appendix this petition page 10). "In addition, there was general agreement among the expert witnesses who testified at the trial that, under the environmental conditions existing that night, a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search. * * *." Italics supplied.	(1) Page 2 "In addition, there was expert testimony at the trial that under the environmental conditions existing that night, a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search. * * *." Italics supplied.
(2) Pages 5-6 (See appendix this petition page 13). "The master's dereliction in failing to search the waters was aggravated by other conduct. For example, his wireless message to the Coast Guard advising it of the seaman's plight was uninformative. It stated: SEAMAN ROBERT E. GARDNER MISSING FROM THE SS BULKCRUDE KXBM LAST SEEN ABOUT 1800 VICINITY TENNESSEE REEF 24 42N 80.44W STOP FIRST MISSED AT 2330 WHEN CALLED FOR WATCH ALL SEARCHES HAVE BEEN TO NO AVAIL PLEASE ADVISE.' Omitted was the vital information concerning speed and course of the vessel since the seaman was last seen."	(2) All of the language from the First Opinion quoted opposite hereto was stricken from the Amended Opinion.

(3) Page 6 (See appendix this petition page 13).

"Further, the master could have acted to notify other ships he knew to be in the area, but he neglected to do so. * * *."

(3) All of the language from the First Opinion quoted opposite hereto was stricken from the Amended Opinion.

(4) Page 6 (See appendix this petition page 13).

"* * *. Although the night was dark and the tides irregular, the waters were warm (80°) and calm, there was little or no wind, and there was a reasonable possibility that other vessels, correctly advised, might have found him. The master was content to leave this to the Coast Guard and then sat idly by as it sent the following message: 'ALL SHIPPING STRAITS OF FLORIDA SS BULKCRUDE ADVISES SEAMAN MISSING X LAST SEEN ON BOARD ABOUT 082300Z (8th December at 11:00 p.m.) VICINITY TENNESSEE REEF 24-42N80-44W X KEEP SHARP LOOKOUT POSSIBLE MAN OVERBOARD.' The message erroneously states that the seaman was last seen at 11:00 p.m., and this missinformation could well have caused the other ships unwarrantedly to limit their search to a small area around Tennessee Reef and to miscalculate the drift of the seaman while in the water. The master did nothing to make a correction or to give more specific information."

(4) All of the language from the First Opinion quoted opposite hereto was stricken from the Amended Opinion.

(5) Page 6 (See appendix this petition page 14)

"Taken in combination, the master's conduct, both of commission and omission, shows an inexcusable disregard of his serious responsibility to a crewman."

(5) All of the language from the First Opinion quoted opposite hereto was stricken from the Amended Opinion.

After deleting from its amended opinion three of the four charges of the master's negligence so strongly relied upon in its first opinion, this left only one charge of negligence levelled against the master in the amended opinion, namely, his failure to turn back and conduct a search for the missing seaman.

The Court of Appeals in its amended majority opinion admits that the decisive question in this case is what was the master's duty under the circumstances with which he was confronted after being advised that Gardner was missing. Stating that it is mindful of other Circuit Court decisions excusing the master's failure to search the waters, it cites in support thereof Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F. (2d) 503 (2 Cir. 1957) and Barrios v. Waterman S. S. Corp., 290 F. (2d) 310 (5 Cir. 1961), and then says:

> "* * *. Unless a search was made by that or other vessels in the area, it could not be determined that Gardner was beyond rescue. * * *
>
> "* * *. A master who abandons a missing seaman while there is yet a reasonable opportunity to save him acts at his own risk." Italics supplied.

In disregard of the overpowering evidence that there was no reasonable possibility of rescuing this missing seaman had the master turned back and conducted a search, together with the findings of the District Court to this effect, the Court of Appeals, in its majority amended opinion, concludes that had the master turned back and conducted a search there would have been a reasonable possibility of rescue and that his failure to make this search was negligence proximately contributing to Gardner's death. The error of the Appeals Court is nowhere better described than in the dissenting opinion of Judge Haynsworth, page 26, appendix this petition, to which we invite this Court's most careful consideration. After stating that it was apparent that none of the witnesses assumed that Gardner went overboard soon after he was last seen; that their difficulty arose out of the fact they had no basis for assuming where he went overboard; that there was general agreement among the said witnesses that because of the cross currents and the darkness of the night there was little or no point in the "BULKCRUDE'S" reversing her course, Judge Haynsworth said:

> "* * *. Since McAllister v. United States, 348 U. S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L. Ed. 20, it is plain that this Court has no power to try the factual issues de novo, or to subsitute its appraisal of the facts for that of the District Court when the District Court's findings are not clearly erroneous. * * *.
>
> "* * *. On the contrary all of the respondent's witnesses and one of the two witnesses for the libellant agreed that a search and rescue effort was hopeless under the circumstances which confronted the Bulkcrude's master that night in the light of the darkness of the night and of the fact that he had no basis for a determination of a search area.
>
> * * *
>
> "I think we exceed the permissible bounds of appellate review when we disregard the abundant testimony supporting the finding that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue of Gardner, or we violate the substantive principle we profess to apply when we insist that there was a reasonable possibility of rescue in the face of the contrary finding below and the abundant evidence which supports it." (Italics supplied).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The reasons for granting this writ have heretofore been given on page 12 of this petition under the caption "Questions Presented". Said reasons will now be discussed in the order there set forth.

FIRST

The Majority Opinion of the Fourth Circuit Completely Ignores McAllister v. United States (1954) 348 U. S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L. Ed. 20.

Previous decisions of this Court, including McAllister v. United States, supra, have made it crystal clear that Circuit Courts are without the power to try factual issues de novo or to substitute their appraisal of the facts for that of the District Court sitting in admiralty, when the District Court's findings are not clearly erroneous. There is no contention in the amended majority opinion of the Court of Appeals that the District Court's findings are clearly erroneous or that they are without evidence to support them. After hearing the witnesses testify and reaching its conclusion to dismiss the libel, the District Court with full knowledge that the master of the "BULK-CRUDE" had not turned back and attempted a search, in its opinion (appendix this petition page 3), said:

"* * *. In short, the master—when faced with the realization that Gardner was overboard—was confronted with a variety of questions in making his decision not to reverse his course and search for the missing crewman. Among these problems are:

(1) The unknown time when Gardner apparently jumped overboard.

(2) The approximate place that such action took place.

* * *

The Court of Appeals is in error in its finding that the basic premise of the District Court's conclusion that there would have been no reasonable possibility of rescue had the Master of the "BULKCRUDE" turned back and attempted a search was the District Court's inference that Gardner must have gone overboard shortly after he was last seen at 6:00 p.m. The basic premise of the District Court's finding that there was no reasonable possibility of rescuing Gardner, had the Master of the "BULKCRUDE" turned back and attempted a search, is not founded on an inference, but on the variety of reasons given in its opinion and fully supported by the evidence.

Although the evidence in the instant case overwhelmingly supports the master's decision not to turn back because in so doing there would be no reasonable possibility of rescue and the finding of the District Court to this effect, the Fourth Circuit while citing with approval its previous decision in the Harris case, supra, that it is for the jury to decide whether the plaintiff has shown there was a reasonable probability of rescue, refused to accept the finding of the Trial Court whose findings this Court has said have the same effect as the findings of a jury.

Conceding as it does that the master's duty to search does not arise unless there is a reasonable possibility of rescue, (See amended majority opinion page 2, appendix this petition page 18), the Court of Appeals in its first opinion attempted to show that in this case a reasonable possibility of rescue did exist, by the following unwarranted statement:

> "In addition, there was general agreement among the expert witnesses who testified at the trial that, under the environmental conditions existing that night, a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search." Italics supplied.

On pages 29-36 of Bulkcrude's petition for rehearing (Transcript of Record, page 20), it was convincingly shown that there was no such general agreement among the experts. This resulted in an amended opinion being filed. In dealing with this question in its amended majority opinion, the words "general agreement" in its first opinion were deleted and the words "expert testimony" substituted, the amended majority opinion reading: (appendix this petition page 19)

> "In addition, there was expert testimony at the trial that, under the environmental conditions existing that night, a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search * * *." (Italics supplied).

The result of the above amendment is that the Court of Appeals concedes that it erroneously stated in its first opinion that there was general agreement among the experts that under the conditions existing that night a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search. It is an admission by that Court that no such general agreement existed. Being confronted with the necessity of attempting to find something in the record to support its conclusion that Gardner might have been saved by a reasonable search, if it was to stand by its original decision to reverse the District Court, the Fourth Circuit, in its amended majority opinion, states that there was "expert testimony" that under the conditions existing that night a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search. The opinion then states that libellant's witness testified to this effect.

The "libellant's witness", above referred to, is the witness Livingston, whose testimony has heretofore been dealt with in this petition and is dealt with at more length in petitioners' (BULKCRUDE's) petition to the Court of Appeals for a rehearing. That petition also quoted the testimony of petitioners' experts to show further error of the Court of Appeals in its finding that petitioners' experts expressed the opinion that an attempted rescue could hold hope of success even with knowledge that Gardner had gone overboard shortly before he was reported missing. These witnesses did not so testify.

Further explanation of all of the above is found in the dissenting opinion of Judge Haynsworth Therein Judge Haynsworth also points out that one of libellant's expert witnesses, Captain Ing., Chief of the Search and Rescue

Section of the Fifth Coast Guard District, testified that it was "almost impossible" to see a man in the water at night, unless equipped with flares or other special signalling equipment, and had he been on duty in Miami he would not have launched a search that night. It is significant that the Court of Appeals in its amended majority opinion chose to completely ignore the testimony of this witness for libellant—perhaps one of the best qualified experts on search and rescue available anywhere.

It is clear from the above that the Court of Appeals in utter disregard of practically uncontradicted evidence that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue and the District Court's finding to that effect, substituted its own appraisal of the facts and came to a conclusion directly opposed to the weight of the evidence and the finding of the District Court.

As so strongly pointed out in the dissenting opinion of Judge Haynsworth, seven of the eight witnesses testifying on the possibility of rescue in this case all testified that under the circumstances that faced the master of the "BULKCRUDE" on the night in question, there was no reasonable possibility of rescue had the master of the "BULKCRUDE" turned back and conducted a search. One of libellant's own experts, the Coast Guard Chief of Search and Rescue, stated that any search held no reasonable possibility of rescue and that it was almost impossible to see a man in the water at night. This man, more qualified in search and rescue than any other witness in this case, and testifying on behalf of libellant, was completely ignored by the majority of the Fourth Circuit. Indeed libellant's other expert even testified that to determine the drift of a body under the conditions that night, it was necessary to know where along the track of the vessel an object went overboard. The Coast Guard Officer in Miami that received the "BULKCRUDE's" message also testified that under the conditions that night there was no reasonable possibility of rescue. Thus both Coast Guard Officers, well qualified experts, and neutral witnesses in this case, testified that they would not have conducted a search on the night in question, as under the circumstances that night there was no reasonable possibility of rescue. All of "BULKCRUDE"'s expert witnesses, its Captain, and its Chief Officer, a man of forty (40) years sea experience, were firm in their testimony that no reasonable possibility of rescue existed.

In McAllister v. United States, supra, this Court at page 8 S. Ct., said:

> "* * *. In reviewing a judgment of a trial court, sitting without a jury in admiralty, the Court of Appeals may not set aside the judgment below unless it is clearly erroneous. * * *
> A finding is clearly erroneous when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed' * * *.
> In relation to the District Court's findings we stand in review in the same position as the Court of Appeals. The question, therefore, is whether the findings of the District Court are clearly erroneous."

After concluding in the McAllister case that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the District Court, this Court, at page 9 S. Ct., said:

> "* * *. Certainly we cannot say on review that a judgment based upon such evidence is clearly erroneous. Meyers v. Reading Co., 331 U.S. 477, 485-486, 67 S. Ct. 1334, 1339, 91 L. Ed. 1615; Tennant v. Peoria & P. U. R. Co., 321 U.S. 29, 64 S. Ct. 429, 88 L. Ed. 520. We think it was an allowable judgment of the District Court, and the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed."

If a Court of Appeals is to substitute its opinion and judgment for that of a District Court that heard the witnesses and had an opportunity to observe their demeanor, the very meaning and purpose behind this Court's decision in McAllister v. United States, supra, is defeated. In the McAllister case this Court said that Courts of Appeals are not to try actions such as that involved in the instant case, de novo, and are not to substitute their opinion for that of the District Court merely because they might disagree with the decision below.

Other findings of fault on the part of the master of the "BULKCRUDE" were set forth in the original opinion of the Court of Appeals, reported in the advanced sheets of the Federal Reporter but withdrawn from the bound volume of that publication, thereby making it necessary that it be set out in the appendix to this petition in order that this Court may have the benefit of the changes. As heretofore shown, these additional findings of fact were deleted from the amended majority opinion of that Court after reconsideration of the case, following the filing by petitioner of its petition for a rehearing. These deletions are further admissions of errors committed by the Court of Appeals. Its original findings were admittedly wrong from their very inception, and as so succinctly shown in the dissenting opinion of Judge Haynsworth, have not been corrected in its amended majority opinion.

SECOND

The Decision Below Conflicts With The Decision Of The Second Circuit In Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F. (2d) 503, Certiorari Denied 355 U.S. 912, 78 S.Ct. 342, And The Decision Of The Fifth Circuit In Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., 290 F. (2d) 310.

The primary question involved in this case is the duty of search and rescue and the liability of a ship owner under the Jones Act, 46 United States Code, Section 688, when sued by the administratrix of a crew member, reported missing and allegedly lost while the ship is at sea. The question is of fundamental importance to seamen, shipowners and the maritime industry in general. Our research produces no opinion from this Court on the subject.

Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F. (2d) 503, a Jones Act case, was decided by the Second Circuit, August 16, 1957, in favor of the shipowner and this Court denied certiorari, 355 U.S. 912, 78 S.Ct. 342. Here a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiff was set aside by the District Court who entered judgment for the defendant. On appeal this judgment was affirmed by the Second Circuit.

Miller was a member of the crew of the Steamship "AFRICAN GLADE". While the ship was en route from New York to Dakar, West Africa, at around 11:30 P.M., November 14, 1950, Miller was seen pacing the after deck and appeared deep in thought. This was the last time Miller was seen aboard the vessel. When he did not show up at the 10:00 A.M., coffee break November 15, the master was notified that Miller was missing. After an unsuccessful search of the vessel, the ship at 10:20 A.M., turned back on her previous course. During the search of the waters the master notified his home office and the United States Coast Guard Weather Ship by wireless. He did not wireless other ships in the vicinity, which the Court said was proper, because the Coast Guard had been in touch with them. When darkness fell at 6:16 P.M., the search was called off—70 miles short of where the ship was when Miller was last seen. The complaint alleged, among other things, that the defendant was negligent in failing to take adequate, proper and necessary steps to conduct a search for Miller after he went overboard. There was no evidence as to the time, manner or place of his departure from the ship. The theory was advanced that Miller jumped overboard intending to commit suicide. This, however, could have no bearing on the principles of law there involved. The Second Circuit, 247 F. (2d), at page 506, said:

> "In a suit under the Jones Act, it is necessary to show that the allegedly negligent act or omission of the defendant caused, in whole or in part, the damage for which recovery is sought. Rogers v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 1957, 353 U.S. 500, 77 S.Ct. 443, 459, 1 L. Ed. 2d 493; Ferguson v. Moore-McCormack Lines, Inc., 1957, 352 U.S. 521, 77 S. Ct. 457, 459, 1 L. Ed. 2d 511. The burden of showing this causation rests on the plaintiff. Johnson v. New York, N. H. & H.R. Co., 2 Cir., 1952, 194 F. 2d 194, reversed on other grounds 344 U.S. 48, 73 S.Ct. 125, 97 L.

Ed. 77; Pittsburgh S. S. Co. v. Palo, 6 Cir. 1933, 64 F. 2d 198. In this case the plaintiff did not introduce evidence of any probative facts to show that the defendant's negligence played any part in Miller's loss of life. The jury was required to indulge in a series of speculations.

"Thus a series of speculations must all be indulged in and resolved in favor of the plaintiff in order to find any basis for saying that Miller could possibly have stayed afloat and alive long enough to be picked up. Each of these speculations must also reach a result which is contrary to the overwhelmingly probabilities. We do not see how the District Court could permit to stand such a jury finding in view of the fact that the plaintiff has the burden of proof. We do not believe that the Jones Act was meant to make ships the absolute insurers of the lives of their crew members who are lost at sea." Italics supplied.

The principle of law so clearly stated by the Second Circuit in Miller v. Farrell Lines, is that in Jones Act cases involving search and rescue, it is necessary to show:

(1) The alleged negligent act or omission of the defendant caused, in whole or in part, the damage sued for; and

(2) The burden of showing negligence, as well as causation, rests on the plaintiff.

Concluding that the plaintiff did not introduce evidence of probative facts sufficient to show that the defendant's alleged negligent acts played any part in Miller's loss of life, the Second Circuit entered final judgment for the defendant, and this Court denied certiorari.

Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., 290 F. (2d) 310, a Jones Act case, was decided by the Fifth Circuit, May 26, 1961, in favor of the shipowner, affirming the District Court.

Barrios was a member of the crew of the Steamship "TOPA TOPA". On December 18, 1957, after the ship left Yokohama and put to sea, Barrios had the bow watch from midnight to 4:00 A. M. He was relieved temporarily for a coffee break by another seaman, returning to his post and reassuming his watch at 2:55 A.M. Some forty minutes later (3:35 A.M.) another seaman (Farnham) went to the bow to afford Barrios an additional respite, and found the bow unattended. Thinking that Barrios had left his post momentarily, Farnham assumed the watch until he was relieved at 4:00 A.M. Farnham did not notify the bridge of Barrios' absence from his post either at 3:35 or at 4:00, thinking to protect him from possible disciplinary action. Hence the master did not learn of Barrios' disappearance until 8:35 a.m. A search of the vessel was instituted, and when Barrios could not be located thereon, radio messages were dispatched to the Japanese Safety Agency, and to vessels in the vicinity. The "TOPA TOPA" at that time (8:35 a.m.) was encountering heavy weather, and did not return to search for the missing seaman. However, heavy weather did not arise until 6:49 a.m. as noted in the appeal briefs for the parties and therefore did not exist at 3:35 a.m., when seaman Farnham took over Barrios' duties as bow lookout and failed to report his absence. The Court at page 311, not mentioning heavy weather, said:

"* * *. Somewhat better founded, we think, is the argument that the seaman Farnham, on finding the bow unattended at 3:35 was remiss in his duty in failing promptly to notify the captain. Despite the fact that Farnham's failure was motivated by a desire to protect Barrios from possible disciplinary action, prudence and seamanship would have required affirmative action on his part."

In dealing with the question of causation involving search and rescue, the Fifth Circuit after commenting on the possible negligence of seaman Farnham in failing to report Barrios' absence on finding the bow unattended at 3:35 again at page 311, said:

"* * *. If it be conceded, arguendo, that this was a negligent act of which the plaintiff might take advantage (negligence of a fellow servant), nevertheless there is a complete want of any evidence tending to show that Barrios was alive at that time, or that he might have been rescued. The fact that he, of necessity, must have suffered a fall from the deck to the water's edge of some 35 to 40 feet; the probability of his being struck by the side of the vessel or by her propellers; the uncertainty as to the time at which he fell; and the darkness and fog, all point to a contrary conclusion. * * *.

The judgment of the Trial Court was correct, and is affirmed." Italics supplied.

It is obvious that here the Fifth Circuit, like the Second Circuit in the Miller case, supra, placed upon the plaintiff the burden of showing not only that the defendants were negligent but that such negligence contributed in whole or in part to the death of plaintiffs' decedent. Because the plaintiffs did not meet this burden judgments were rendered for the defendants.

In the Gardner case, the findings of the District Court that the burden of proof as to both negligence and causation was on the plaintiff, were in accord with those approved by the Second Circuit in the Miller case, certiorari denied, and those approved by the Fifth Circuit in the Barrios case. The findings and conclusions of the Fourth Circuit are in direct conflict.

Instead of agreeing with the Second Circuit and the Fifth Circuit that in Jones Act cases, involving the duty of search and rescue, the burden of proving negligence and causation is on the plaintiff or the libellant, as the case may be, and that there is no liability on the defendant unless the plaintiff has shown to the satisfaction of the trier of the facts that had the master turned back and attempted a search, there would have been a reasonable possibility of rescue, the Fourth Circuit in its amended majority opinion has placed this burden on the "Bulkcrude". It held that the master's failure to conduct a search, despite the overpowering evidence that such search held no reasonable possibility of rescue, imposes liability upon the ship.

The Fourth Circuit in note 3 of its amended majority opinion beginning at page 22 of the appendix to this petition makes this significant statement:

> "We are mindful of other Circuit Court decisions excusing the master's failure to search the waters.

> See Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F.2d 503 (2d Cir. 1957). That case, however, was tried on the theory that the seaman had committed suicide, and the court declined to presume in such circumstances that he changed his mind and could have been saved by a reasonable search. See also, Barrios v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 290 F.2d 310 (5th Cir. 1961). * * *."

The above statement by the majority of the Court is an obvious admission by the Fourth Circuit that its decision is in direct conflict with the decisions of other Circuits on the basic question involved in this case.

After making the above statement in the note to its opinion, the Fourth Circuit beginning on page 6 of its opinion, appendix page 23 this petition says:

> "* * *. Unless a search was made by that or other vessels in the area, it could not be determined that Gardner was beyond rescue. * * *
>
> * * *. Failure to reverse her course and conduct a search, the argument runs, does not of itself account for the death, since it has not been definitely shown that the man was alive and could have been saved. But this view ignores the underlying character of the duty. It was less than a duty to rescue him, but it was a positive duty to make a sincere attempt at rescue. The duty (search) is of such nature that its omission will contribute to cause the seaman's death. The duty arises when there is a reasonable possibility of rescue. Proximate cause is tested by the same standard, i.e., causation is proved if the master's omission destroys the reasonable possibility of rescue.

> Harris v. Pennsylvania R.R. 50 F. 2d 866, 869 (4th Cir. 1931). Therefore, proximate cause here is implicit in the breach of duty (failure to search). * * *. Once the evidence sustains the reasonable possibility of rescue, ample or narrow, according to the circumstances, total disregard of the duty (search), refusal to make even a try, as was the case here, imposes liability.
>
> * * *
>
> We hold that the burden of the risk involved in the master's inaction must be cast by the law on him and the ship, and not on the helpless man in the water. * * *. A master who abandons a missing seaman while there is yet a reasonable opportunity to save him, acts at his own risk." (Italics supplied.)

The basis of the Fourth Circuit's decision in the instant case is that a search is mandatory in all instances. In conflict with the decisions of the Second and Fifth Circuits, the decision of the Fourth Circuit in the Gardner case holds that despite the lack of any probative evidence that the man was alive and could have been rescued, the alleged negligent failure of the master of the "Bulkcrude" to search contributed to the seaman's death. The Fourth Circuit disregarding practically uncontradicted evidence that there was no reasonable possibility of rescuing Gardner had the Master of the "BULKCRUDE" turned back on the night in question and conducted a search, and disregarding the findings of the Trial Court to the same effect, holds that the Master was negligent in failing to make a try, and that such negligence proximately contributed to Gardner's death, for which the owner of the "BULKCRUDE" must respond in damages. As we have heretofore shown, the amended majority opinion of the Fourth Circuit says:

> * * *. Unless a search was made by that or other vessels in the area, it could not be determined that Gardner was beyond rescue. * * *. We hold only that refusal to make any effort (search) whatever cannot be justified."

We submit that the Fourth Circuit could not have used clearer or stronger language to support its finding that irrespective of the evidence or the findings of the District Court that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue, the Master's failure to turn back and make a search is in itself not only negligence but such negligence as "will contribute to cause the seaman's death", that is, both negligence and causation. Statements in the Fourth Circuit's opinion that the evidence must sustain the reasonable possibility of rescue before the Master's failure to turn back and search will constitute negligence, are completely inconsistent with its language hereinabove quoted. Such statements are likewise inconsistent with the Circuit Court's action in reversing on the minority evidence of one witness for libellant. Nor do they wipe out the findings of the Fourth Circuit that there is a duty on the Master to turn back in all such cases "in order to constitute a good faith performance of the ship's obligation". (See appendix this petition page 23).

If it be argued that the statement in the opinion of the Fourth Circuit that there was evidence to sustain the reasonable possibility of rescue, justifies its reversal of the judgment entered by the District Court and does not bring its decision in conflict with the Second and Fifth Circuits, the answer to this contention is that such a finding is contrary to the weight of the evidence, is contrary to the findings of the District Court and as explained in the dissenting opinion of Circuit Judge Haynsworth, is contrary to the decision of this Court in McAllister v. United States, heretofore discussed.

The Fourth Circuit in the Gardner case has established a completely new rule of law nowhere before enunciated in negligence actions arising under the Jones Act or F.E.L.A. It has removed the burden of proof from the shoulders of the libellant in this case and placed it upon the respondents. This doctrine for the first time forces the defendant in a negligence action under the Jones Act to exonerate itself. Its effect is that in a case where a seaman disappears under unknown circumstances, the burden to show the man was not alive and could not be rescued, is shifted to the defendant. Such action by the Fourth Circuit is directly contra to the language of the Second Circuit in Miller v. Farrell Lines, where at the bottom of page 506, it said:

> "* * *. We do not see how the District Court could permit to stand such a jury finding in view of the fact that the plaintiff has the burden of proof. We do not believe that the Jones Act was meant to make ships the absolute insurers of the lives of their crew members who are lost at sea." Italics supplied

The decision of the Fourth Circuit in the Gardner case does exactly what the Second Circuit in the Miller case says was not meant to be the law, that is, it makes ships and their owners the absolute insurers of the lives of men who are lost at sea unless the ship owner shows that rescue was impossible. In the Gardner case, as well as in the Miller case and the Barrios case, there was no evidence of any fault of the ship contributing to the man going overboard if indeed he did. It is common knowledge that in the ordinary course of their duties and in weather that is not rough, seamen seldom fall overboard. Usually the more likely explanation is that the man jumps overboard for one reason or another. As pointed out in Judge Haynsworth's dissenting opinion, Gardner was contemplating hospitalization and on the next day foot prints were observed on a beam immediately beneath the port in the head just aft of the forecastle in which Gardner was quartered.

In the Gardner case the Fourth Circuit has shifted the burden of proof as to both negligence and proximate cause from the plaintiff to the defendant. The Court in its decision states:

> "* * *. Unless a search was made by that or other vessels in the area, it could not be determined that Gardner was beyond rescue."

This statement means that in all such cases the master of the ship must turn back and make a search of the waters despite, among other things the number of hours between the time the man was last seen and the time he is discovered missing. Otherwise, the plaintiff prevails merely by showing that the master did not turn back and conduct a search. The Fourth Circuit's majority opinion must be carefully considered in order to realize its effect on the burden of proof as to negligence in such cases.

The Fourth Circuit states in the opening paragraph of its opinion that the basis of the suit is the master's failure to make any attempt to rescue. We respectfully submit that the real question involved in this case is whether on the facts as established by the record there was any reasonable possibility of rescuing Gardner had a search been at-temped. If the test to be applied is reasonable possibility of rescue then surely the record in this case does not support it. If the test to be applied is that a search must be attempted in every case, as the decision of the Fourth Circuit in effect holds, we again respectfully submit such is in direct conflict with not only the Second and Fifth Circuits but the Harris Case of the Fourth Circuit as well.

In Miller v. Farrell Lines and Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., the Court of Appeals dismissed the libels because under the Jones Act, the burden of proof being on the plaintiff, the plaintiff had failed to prove that the man in the water was still alive and might be rescued. The Fourth Circuit's decision has completely shifted from the plaintiff to the defendant the burden of proof. The decision forces the defendant to prove that the man in the water, through no fault of the ship, is not alive and could not be rescued. Such a shift in the burden of proof is in direct conflict with Miller v. Farrell Lines, Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., and all prior decisions under the Jones Act.

We respectfully urge this Court to consider the far reaching effect of the decision of the Fourth Circuit in the Gardner case, which, we submit, is in direct conflict with other circuits.

This Court, as we have said earlier, has never passed on the question of Search and Rescue and with the conflict that now exists between the Circuits, we respectfully submit that the conflict should at this time be resolved by this Court. The question of what duty is owed and the extent thereof in such cases is a question that affects shipping and seamen the nation over. Until the existing conflict is resolved, the law to be applied will remain a nebulous concept, peculiar to the Court of Appeals hearing the case.

CONCLUSION

As the decision of the Fourth Circuit completely ignores the decision of this Court in McAllister v. United States, supra, and also is in direct conflict with the decision of the Second Circuit in Miller v. Farrell Lines, and with the decision of the Fifth Circuit in Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., and for other reasons herein set forth, petitioners respectfully request that a Writ of Certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., Et. Al., Petitioner

R. ARTHUR JETT
ROY L. SYKES
R. ARTHUR JETT, JR.
Counsel for Petitioners

JETT, SYKES & COUPLAND
701 Citizens Bank Building
Norfolk 10, Virginia

APPENDIX

MEMORANDUM OF COURT, FILED DECEMBER 29, 1960

In this action under the Jones Act, 46 U. S. C. A. §688, libellant seeks a recovery for the death of her husband, a member of the crew of the SS BULKCRUDE, on December 8, 1958, while the vessel was southbound off the Florida Keys enroute from New York to Corpus Christi, Texas.

On the morning of December 8, the decedent, Gardner, complained to the master that he felt "shaky", whereupon he was given some medicine. He was also relieved from his 1200 to 1600 watch. Later the master instructed the chief mate to provide a relief for Gardner's 2400 to 0400 watch, but Gardner indicated that he intended to stand this watch. He was last seen at approximately 1830 on December 8 when he returned to his quarters. At 2340 a seaman went to Gardner's quarters to call him for his midnight watch. As he could not be located, this fact was reported to the master who immediately ordered a thorough search of the vessel, including an interrogation of most of the crew members to ascertain when Gardner had last been seen. The search of the vessel was completed around 0100 on December 9. Respondent contends that libellant has failed to establish the death, citing Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Zimmerman, 5 Cir., 75 F. (2d) 758, but the facts in that case are so clearly distinguishable that no comment is required. In the present controversy we have a crew member last seen at 6:30 P. M. while the vessel was off the Florida Keys; when reported missing at 11:40 P. M., a thorough search of the vessel was conducted; the vessel did not dock for several days thereafter, and Gardner was not thereafter seen either dead or alive. The inescapable conclusion is that Gardner went overboard at some hour between 6:30 P. M. and 11:40 P. M. on December 8, 1958. Whether he met his death by drowning, by becoming involved with the ship's propeller, or by falling victim to a shark, barracuda, or other marine life, is immaterial.

From the time Gardner was last seen alive until the completion of the search around 0100 on December 9, approximately 6½ hours had elapsed. The vessel had, in the interim, traversed a distance of approximately 104 miles in smooth seas, on a dark night with no moon, with water temperature of 80 degrees, and under varying current conditions more adequately revealed by the testimony. At 0040 (12:40 A. M.) on December 9, the master sent a message to the Coast Guard at Miami reading as follows:

> "Seaman Robert E. Gardner missing from the SS Bulkcrude KXBM last seen about 1800 vicinity Tennessee Reef 24-42 North 80-44 West Stop First missed at 2330 when called for watch. All searches have been to no avail. Please advise."

In response, the Coast Guard advised that it would issue an "all ship's broadcast" and, at 0120 it sent an emergency message, followed by two hourly broadcasts through its marine operator, stating:

> "All shipping straits of Florida SS Bulkcrude advises seaman missing X Last seen on board about 2300Z vicinity Tennessee Reef 24-42 N. 80-44 W. X Keep sharp lookout possible man overboard."

Libellant urges that the vessel's master at no time requested the Coast Guard to take any affirmative action to search for Gardner. The answer lies in the testimony of the Chief of Search and Rescue Section who states that the Coast Guard places no importance on the difference between a request for search and a mere notification; that each situation is evaluated separately to determine whether a search will be conducted and, in any event, any search would not be carried on at nighttime as the chances of locating a man in the water in darkness are very poor unless the man is equipped with a flare or its equivalent. Indeed, this witness described the chances of finding a man overboard at night as "almost impossible".

Much of the evidence relates to the various points passed by the vessel off the Florida Keys. In some instances the current was away from the Keys; in others the current was set in toward the shore line or Keys. Suffice it to say, there was no set pattern followed by the vessel. A course made good did not mean a course actually traversed. Of course, an object, such as a human being, entering the water will flow with the current. In short, the master—when faced with the realization that Gardner was overboard—was confronted with a variety of questions in making his decision not to reverse his course and search for the missing crewman. Among these problems are:

(1) The unknown time when Gardner apparently jumped overboard.

(2) The approximate place that such action took place.

(3) The distance traversed and elapsed time since Gardner was last seen.

(4) Whether the seaman avoided the propeller after hitting the water.

(5) Whether Gardner hit the water in such a manner as to remain afloat.

(6) Whether, assuming an intent to commit suicide, Gardner changed his mind after striking the water and endeavored to remain afloat.

(7) Whether he could and, with some reasonable possibility, would remain afloat long enough for the vessel to reach him.

(8) The darkness of the night.

(9) The danger of shark, barracuda, and other marine life.

(10) The danger incident to following a reciprocal course in returning to the Tennessee Reef area.

The Court discounts respondents' contention that any appreciable danger would be encountered by the vessel in reversing its course, thus requiring it to follow a path of travel customarily reserved for southbound ships. With the weather clear and seas smooth, the normal rules of navigation would not present any obstacle of note when contrasted with the duty imposed by law to conduct a search for the missing seaman, if such a search has any reasonable possibility of success.

As to the remaining problems confronting the master, the Court is in complete agreement with the masters' conclusion that there was no reasonable possibility or probability of locating Gardner. It is argued that the vessel should have retraced its course for at least a short distance and a few hours. But it is a reasonable inference from the testimony that since Gardner was last seen around 6:30 P. M., his disappearance from the vessel more than likely occurred shortly thereafter, as other crewmen would have probably seen him around the vessel. A proper search under such circumstances, if required, would have entailed a return to the Tennessee Reef area, probably at a lesser speed to enable a proper lookout to be maintained in the interim. As the ship was off Rebecca Shoal Lighthouse around 1 A. M. on December 9, when it was substantially determined that Gardner was overboard, and as 6½ hours had elapsed, it means that the BULKCRUDE would probably not have reached the Tennessee Reef area until some appreciable time after 8 A. M. Conceding, for the purpose of argument, that a good swimmer may survive indefinitely in water temperature of 80 degrees, it does not follow that any reasonable possibility of locating Gardner existed under the facts of this case.

This Court has previously held in Tate v. C. G. Willis, Inc., 145 F. Supp. 402, that there must be some causal relation between the alleged breach of legal obligation on the part of the shipowner and the loss of life. Some reasonable inference of probable success in saving the life of the seaman must exist. In Tate, the seaman fell into the Delaware River when attempting to board a tug from the dock. The only affirmative effort to rescue was to continuously play flashlights over the area where Tate entered the water which, admittedly, was in a confined area. While the facts of no two cases perhaps are identical, and while each case must rest upon the peculiar factual situation existing, the principles of law in Tate are believed to correctly state the rule in this circuit. Such is the reasoning in Harris v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 4 Cir., 50 F. (2d) 866, 868, where Judge Soper said:

> "But we have no doubt that a legal obligation rests upon a ship to use due diligence to save one of the crew, who, by his own neglect, falls into the sea; and that the owners are liable if, by failing to perform this duty, his life is lost."

See, also, Sadler v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 4 Cir., 159 F. (2d) 784.

Libellant, while not agreeing with the principles set forth in Tate, advances the novel theory that the question of causal connection is not applicable unless there has been some effort on the part of the ship to conduct a search. Stated otherwise, libellant argues that since there is an absolute duty under all circumstances to conduct a search for a crewman discovered to be overboard, the shipowner who fails to make any search is automatically negligent as a matter of law is barred from advancing the defense of lack of possible or probable success in locating the seaman. Admittedly, in the present case, the master of the vessel did nothing by way of search for the missing man overboard other than to notify the Coast Guard. To accept libellant's premise it would, under any and all circumstances, be incumbent upon the ship to retrace its course and conduct a search, irrespective of the number of hours elapsed or miles traversed. We do not believe that the law is subject to such a strict interpretation. The issue of causation has been repeatedly held to be a factor for consideration by the trier of fact in "failure to rescue" cases. New York Central R. Co. v. Grimstead, 2 Cir., 264 Fed. 334; Hutchinson v. Dickie, 6 Cir., 162 F. (2d) 103; Johnson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 2 Cir., 194 F. (2d) 194; Petition of Trans-Pacific Fishing & Packing Co. (The Western Clipper), D. C. Wash., 152 F. Supp.

44; Miller v. Farrell Lines, 2 Cir., 247 F. (2d) 503, cert. den. 355 U. S. 912. The latter case, decided under the Jones Act subsequent to the decision of the Supreme Court in Rogers v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 352 U. S. 500, held that the burden of showing causation rested upon the plaintiff, even though the negligence need only be shown to be in whole or in part that of the officers, agents or employees. The syllogism advanced in Miller is closely analogous to the views of this Court on the question of causation, although it must be noted that the vessel in Miller did attempt a search after a lapse of nearly 11 hours following the time Miller was last seen. There is nothing in the opinion of Circuit Judge Lumbard to indicate that the vessel was, or was not, under a duty to conduct this search.

We are told that the requirement of search is a contractual obligation and, therefore, the possibilities or probabilities of success only touch upon the sufficiency of the performance of the contractual duty to search and rescue. That it is a part of the implied contract with all seamen to use all reasonable means to save the life cannot be doubted. However, this action is instituted under the Jones Act which requires proof of negligence. That there may be an alleged breach of a contractual duty does not foreclose the right of recovery in tort, as will be seen from Cortes v. Baltimore Insular Line, 287 U. S. 367, where Mr. Justice Cardozo said:

> "We think the origin of the duty is consistent with a remedy in tort, since the wrong, if a violation of a contract, is also something more . The duty, as already pointed out, is one annexed by law to a relation, and annexed as an inseparable incident without heed to any expression of the will of the contracting parties.

> For breach of a duty thus imposed, the remedy upon the contract does not exclude an alternative remedy built upon tort. . . . . If the wrong is of such a nature as to bring it by fair intendment within the category of a 'personal injury' that has been caused by the 'negligence' of the master, it is not beyond the statute because it may appropriately be placed in another category also."

The Supreme Court, in reversing the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Cortes, apparently recognized that, even where the negligence grows out of an alleged breach of contractual duty, there must, nevertheless, be a causal relation between the negligence and the death. 287 U. S., at page 378. Thus, it is apparent that the elementary principles of negligence (as required by the Jones Act) and causation must be established.

While not mentioned in the brief, and now apparently abandoned, the contention was once submitted that the provisions of 46 U. S. C. A. §728 made it mandatory upon the master to conduct the search. The statute does impose an obligation upon any master to assist "every person who is found at sea in danger of being lost", providing assistance can be rendered without serious danger to his own vessel, crew, or passengers. The statute imposes a criminal penalty against the master. To impute civil liability upon the owner for the alleged criminal act of the master is contrary to Warshauer v. Lloyd Sabaudo S. A., 2 Cir., 71 F. (2d) 146. The point does not merit further discussion.

Holding that, under the peculiar facts of this case, the master of the BULKCRUDE was not negligent in failing to reverse his course for the purpose of conducting a search, and that, in any event, there was no reasonable possibility of success and, hence, there was no causal relation between the negligence, if any, and the death, a decree will be entered dismissing the libel.

The Court, pursuant to General Admiralty Rule 46½, adopts this memorandum in lieu of any specific findings of fact and conclusions of law.

FIRST OPINION

SOBELOFF, Chief Judge:

Failure of the master of a vessel to make any attempt to rescue a member of his crew lost at sea is the basis of the present suit, brought under the Jones Act, 46 U.S.C.A. § 688, by the seaman's widow and executrix against the vessel and her owner.

The S.S. Bulkcrude was en route from New York to Corpus Christi along the Florida Keys at 11:30 p.m. on December 8, 1958, when seaman Robert Gardner was called to stand watch. He could not be found, and the master ordered a search of the vessel. The search, which lasted an hour or more, proved unsuccessful. Inquiry disclosed that Gardner was last seen about 6:00 p.m. that evening. At 12:30 a.m., December 9, the Coast Guard was notified by wireless, and it responded with an "All Ships' Broadcast," but the master took no further steps to find the missing seaman. Indeed, he did not alter the speed or course of the Bulkcrude either during or after the search. At 6:00 a.m., he reported Gardner's disappearance to the owner in New York and asked for instructions. The owner's answer was, "Action must be decided by you as master." No action was taken, and the vessel, which had maintained her course and speed through the night, continued on to Corpus Christi. These facts are not in controversy.

In addition, there was general agreement among the expert witnesses who testified at the trial that, under the environmental conditions existing that night, a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search. The experts differed, however, in regard to the lapse of time and distance within which a rescue operation had hope of success. On the one hand, libellant's witness testified that a reasonable search over the entire course traveled by the Bulkcrude between 6:00 p.m., when Gardner was last seen, and 11:30 p.m., when he was reported missing, would probably have succeeded; while the respondents' experts expressed the opinion that an attempted rescue operation could hold hope of success only if Gardner had in fact gone overboard shortly before 11:30 p. m., when he was reported missing. Obviously these judgments are not conflicting in their entirety—they agree that there was some range of time and distance in which rescue would have been possible if attempted. They agree at least that if the man entered the water not long before 11:30 p.m. and that fact had been known, then a search would have been indicated for it would have had a reasonable expectation of success.

The District Court presumed that Gardner went overboard soon after he was last seen at 6:00 p.m., rather than at some later point of time, and adopted the testimony of the respondents' experts as to the time and area within which an effective effort might have been made. On this basis the court arrived at the conclusion that, as Gardner was beyond rescuable limits, the master's failure to make the attempt had no causal connection with the seaman's death. Judgment was entered for the respondents. 190 F. Supp. 143 (E.D. Va. 1960).

The survival of a seaman adrift at sea depends in large measure upon the diligence of those who are required by law to look for him. If they default in their duty, death is made certain. In recognition of this unyielding truth the admiralty law annexes to a seaman's contract of employment an obligation on the part of the master to use every reasonable means to save the seaman's life if he goes overboard. Harris v. Pennsylvania R.R., 50 F. 2d 866 (4th Cir. 1931). In the cited case, after discussing the established obligation of the vessel to provide medical care and attendance to an injured seaman, Judge Soper for our court concluded: "Equally clear is the obligation upon the part of the ship to save the life of a sailor who falls overboard through a misadventure, not uncommon in his dangerous calling. It is absurd to admit the duty to extend aid in the lesser emergency, and to deny it in the greater. In both cases, it is implied in the contract that the ship shall use every reasonable means to save the life of a human being who has no other source of help. The universal custom of the sea demands as much wherever human life is in danger. The seaman's contract of employment requires it as a matter of right." Id. at 868-69.

This humanitarian rule, known as the rescue doctrine, has been approved by the Supreme Court, Cortes v. Baltimore Insular Line, 287 U.S. 367, 377 (1932), and followed in other circuits. See Johnson v. United States, 74 F.2d

703 (2d Cir. 1935); Kirincich v. Standard Dredging Co., 112 F.2d 163 (3d Cir. 1940); Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F.2d 503 (2d Cir. 1957); Smith v. Reinauer Oil Transport, 256 F.2d 646 (1st Cir. 1958); Barrios v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 290 F.2d 310 (5th Cir. 1961).[1]

The instant case presents no unheard of situation. Not infrequently, a seaman disappears from his vessel under unknown circumstances, and before he is reported missing several hours have elapsed since he was last seen. It can indeed be speculated, as the respondents suggest, that the seaman slipped, fainted or otherwise involuntarily went overboard, or that he entered the water bent on self-destruction. Likewise, it is conceivable that he was killed in the fall, cut to pieces by the propeller or drowned immediately; also, there may be speculation as to the precise point in time when these events occurred. But only one thing is known with certainty: often seaman who fall overboard survive for many hours in the water.[2]

---

[1] A number of district court cases have applied the doctrine. United States v. Knowles, 26 Fed. Cas. 800 (No. 15,540) (D.C. N.D. Cal. 1864); Salla v. Hellman, 7 F.2d 953 (S.D. Cal. 1925); The G. W. Glenn, 4 F. Supp. 727 (D. Del. 1933); Tompkins v. Pilots Ass'n for Bay and River Delaware, 32 F. Supp. 439 (E.D. Pa. 1940); Ferro v. United States Lines Co. 74 F. Supp 250 (S.D. N.Y. 1947); Petition of Trans-Pacific Fishing & Packing Co., 152 F. Supp. 44 (W.D. Wash. 1957); Tate v. C. G. Willis, Inc., 154 F. Supp. 402 (E.D. Va. 1957); Tweedy v. Esso Standard Oil Co., 190 F. Supp. 437 (S.D. N.Y. 1960).

[2] At trial, libellant tendered proof of the high proportion of successful sea rescues conducted by the Allies during World War II. This revealed a large number of successes following as much as twenty-four hours in the water. Perhaps, however, the most striking example of a man's ability to survive is found in Petition of Trans-Pacific Fishing & Packing Co., 152 F. Supp. 44 (W.D. Wash. 1957). There a seaman was saved after he "swam, drifted and treaded water for about 56 hours after he was swept overboard." Id. at 46.

The decisive question is, what was the master's duty in the present circumstances? The court found as a fact that turning back would have entailed no risk. The only thing that would have been lost in attempting rescue was time; the Bulkcrude might have reached its distination a half day late, at the most.

The master's dereliction in failing to search the wafers was aggravated by other conduct. For example, his wireless message to the Coast Guard advising it of the seaman's plight was uninformative. It stated: "SEAMAN ROBERT E. GARDNER MISSING FROM THE SS BULKCRUDE KXBM LAST SEEN ABOUT 1800 VICINITY TENNESSEE REEF 24.42N 80.44W STOP FIRST MISSED AT 2330 WHEN CALLED FOR WATCH ALL SEARCHES HAVE BEEN TO NO AVAIL PLEASE ADVISE."

Omitted was the vital information concerning speed and course of the vessel since the seaman was last seen.

Further, the master could have acted to notify other ships he knew to be in the area, but he neglected to do so. Although the night was dark and the tides irregular, the waters were warm (80°) and calm, there was little or no wind, and there was a reasonable possibility that other vessels, correctly advised, might have found him. The master was content to leave this to the Coast Guard and then sat idly by as it sent the following message: "ALL SHIPPING STRAITS OF FLORIDA SS BULKCRUDE ADVISES SEAMAN MISSING X LAST SEEN ON BOARD ABOUT 082300Z [8th December at 11:00 p.m.] VICINITY TENNESSEE REEF 24-42N80-44W X KEEP SHARP LOOKOUT POSSIBLE MAN OVERBOARD." The message erroneously states that the seaman was last seen at 11:00 p.m., and this misinformation could well have caused the other ships unwarrantedly to limit their search to a small area around Tennessee Reef and to miscalculate the drift of the seaman while in the water. The master did nothing to make a correction or to give more specific information.

Taken in combination, the master's conduct, both of commission and omission, shows an inexcusable disregard of his serious responsibility to a crewman. We hold that under the facts here the master did not do all that was required of him.[3]

The District Court, as we have noted, arrived at its conclusion exonerating the respondents by accepting their unsupported and unwarranted deduction that, because Gardner was last seen at 6:00 p.m., he must have gone overboard shortly thereafter and was surely beyond reach at 11:30 p.m. We think the court was in error in its basic premise that Gardner went overboard soon after he was last seen. In truth, no one could really know with any degree of certainty whether the fatal plunge occurred five minutes after he was last seen, or five minutes before he was reported missing, or at what intervening moment.

---

[3] We are mindful of other circuit court decisions excusing the master's failure to search the waters. See Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F.2d 503 (2d Cir. 1957). That case, however, was tried on the theory that the seaman had committed suicide, and the court declined to presume in such circumstances that he changed his mind and could have been saved by a reasonable search. See also, Barrios v. Waterman SS. Corp., 290 F.2d 310 (5th Cir. 1961). On the other hand, in Salla v. Hellman, 7 F.2d 953 (S.D. Cal. 1925), a master's failure to attempt rescue of a seaman who fell overboard during a storm established liability, even though there was no affirmative showing that an attempt would have succeeded. See also, Kirincich v. Standard Dredging Co., 112 F.2d 163 (3d Cir. 1940).

Unless a search was made by that or other vessels in the area, it could not be determined that Gardner was beyond rescue. This is the classic situation which in reason and humanity called for the exertion of every reasonable effort to ascertain his whereabouts. We need not define how far or how extensive a search was called for in order to constitute a good faith performance of the ship's obligation. We hold only that refusal to make any effort whatever cannot be justified.

Proximate cause, the ship urges, has not been proved. Failure to reverse her course or accurately inform other vessels, the argument runs, does not of itself account for the death, since it has not been definitely shown that the man was alive and could have been saved. But this view ignores the underlying character of the duty. It was less than a duty to rescue him, but it was a positive duty to make a sincere attempt at rescue. The duty is of such nature that its omission will contribute to cause the seaman's death. The duty arises when there is a reasonable possibility of rescue. Proximate cause is tested by the same standard, i.e., causation is proved if the master's omission destroys the reasonable possibility of rescue. Harris v. Pennsylvania R.R., 50 F.2d 866, 869 (4th Cir. 1931). Therefore, proximate cause here is implicit in the breach of duty. Indeed, the duty would be empty if it did not itself embrace the loss as a consequence of its breach. Once the evidence sustains the reasonable possibility of rescue, ample or narrow, according to the circumstances, total disregard of the duty, refusal to make even a try, as was the case here, imposes liability.

Moreover, the master's default—virtually complete—is emphasized by another consequence flowing therefrom. It obliterated all possibility of evidence to prove whether a search or a watch by other vessels, if undertaken, would have succeeded or failed. This alone has in analogous situations been considered a sufficient ground to fasten responsibility on the wrongdoer.[4] However, we do not rest our decision on this principle.

---

[4] In a negligence case the Supreme Court of Canada has said:

"What, then, the culpable actor has done by his initial negligent act is, first, to have set in motion a dangerous force which embraces the injured person within the scope of its probable mischief; and next, in conjunction with circumstances which he must be held to contemplate, to have made more difficult if not impossible the means of proving the possible damaging results of his own act or the similar results of the act of another. He has violated not only the victim's substantive right to security, but he has also culpably impaired the latter's remedial right of establishing liability. By confusing his act with environmental conditions, he has, in effect, destroyed the victim's power of proof.

"The legal consequence of that is, I should say, that the onus is then shifted to the wrongdoer to exculpate himself; * * *." Cook v. Lewis, [1951] Can. Sup. Ct. 830, 823-33, [1952] 1 Dom. L. Rep. 1, 3-4 (1951).

This quote is from the concurring opinion by Judge Rand, but it is in line with the expressed view of Judge Cartwright writing for the majority. [1951] Can. Sup. Ct. at 842-43, [1952] 1 Dom. L. Rep. at 18.

To the same effect is Landers v. East Texas Salt Water Disposal Co., 151 Tex. 251, 248 S.W. 2d 731 (1952). There two actors had done independent acts resulting in the pollution of a stream, and the court relieved the plaintiff of his burden of proving the extent to which the defendant and other causes, respectively, contributed to the injury. The court applied the principle that where a wrongdoer has united his tortious conduct with other causes resulting in injury to another, justice dicates that he may not take advantage of the fact that he has thereby prevented the injured person from demonstrating the defendant's share in the resulting injury. See also, Summers v. Tice, 33 Cal. 2d 80, 199 P.2d 1 (1948); Meier v. Holt, 347 Mich. 430, 436, 80 N.W. 2d 207, 213 (1956) (dissent); Harris v. Cleveland, 294 S.W.2d 235, 241 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956).

The respondents offer no acceptable explanation of the master's conduct. They seek to justify it by the argument that unavoidable passage of time and distance relieved him of the duty to do more than he did. They develop this defense as a conclusion from three premises: first they say that the master had no duty to stop the Bulkcrude while she was being searched to ascertain whether Gardner was still aboard; second, that since the vessel steamed on during the search for an hour and a half after Gardner was reported missing, all possibility of then conducting an effective search of the waters was thereby erased and third, that he was not obligated to amplify or correct his message to the Coast Guard, or correct their misunderstanding. The defense is unacceptable.

We do not imply that in every case immediately upon word of a seaman's absence from his watch all progress of the ship must be halted and the ship reversed for rescue operations while a search is made aboard for the seaman. It is realized that the master is called upon to make his decision on the basis of uncertain fact.

We hold that the burden of the risk involved in the master's inaction must be cast by the law on him and the ship, and not on the helpless man in the water. If the rescue doctrine is not to be utterly stultified, this must be the rule. The grave obligation of rescue is not to be satisfied

---

Prosser describes the rule as requiring the defendant to "exonerate itself or pay." Prosser, Torts, 207-08, 230-31 (2d ed. 1955).

Analogously, there has long existed a rule of evidence that if a party intentionally or fraudulently destroys a written document with the intent to suppress evidence, its content is presumed to have been detrimental to him. Omnia praesummuntur contra spoliatorem. See Berthold-Jennings Lumber Co. v. St Louis, I.M. & S. Ry., 80 F.2d 32, 41 (8th Cir. 1935).

merely by a search of the vessel. A master who abandons a missing seaman while there is yet a reasonable opportunity to save him, acts at his own risk.

In the circumstances of this case, the inaction of the master in the respects noted established a neglect of the duty of rescue—a neglect from which a contributing cause of the seaman's death is fairly and conclusively drawn by law.

Reversed and remanded for the determination of damages.

SECOND OPINION

[October 26, 1962]

SOBELOFF, Chief Judge.

Failure of the master of a vessel to make any attempt to rescue a member of his crew lost at sea is the basis of the present suit, brought under the Jones Act, 46 U.S.C.A. § 688, by the seaman's widow and executrix against the vessel and her owner.

The S.S. Bulkcrude was en route from New York to Corpus Christi along the Florida Keys at 11:30 p.m. on December 8, 1958, when seaman Robert Gardner was called to stand watch. He could not be found, and the master ordered a search of the vessel. The search, which lasted an hour or more, proved unsuccessful. Inquiry disclosed that Gardner was last seen about 6:00 p.m. that evening. At 12:30 a.m., December 9, the Coast Guard was notified by wireless, and it responded with an "All Ships' Broadcast," but the master took no further steps to find the missing seaman. Indeed, he did not alter the speed or course of the Bulkcrude either during or after the search. At 6:00 a.m., he reported Gardner's disappearance to the owner in New York and asked for instructions. The owner's answer was, "Action must be decided by you as master." No action was taken, and the vessel, which had maintained her course and speed through the night, continued on to Corpus Christi. These facts are not in controversy.

In addition, there was expert testimony at the trial that, under the environmental conditions existing that night, a man in the water might have survived and been saved by a reasonable search. The experts differed, however, in regard to the lapse of time and distance within which a rescue operation had hope of success. On the one hand, libellant's witness testified that a reasonable search over the entire course traveled by the Bulkcrude between 6:00 p.m., when Gardner was last seen, and 11:30 p.m., when he was reported missing, would probably have succeeded; while the respondents' experts expressed the opinion that an attempted rescue operation could hold hope of success only if Gardner had in fact gone overboard shortly before 11:30 p.m., when he was reported missing. Obviously these judgments are not conflicting in their entirety—they agree that there was some range of time and distance in which rescue would have been possible if attempted. They agree at least that if the man entered the water not long before 11:30 p.m. and that fact had been known, then a search would have been indicated for it would have had a reasonable expectation of success.

The District Court presumed that Gardner went overboard soon after he was last seen at 6:00 p.m., rather than at some later point of time, and adopted the testimony of the respondents' experts as to the time and area within which an effective effort might have been made. On this basis the court arrived at the conclusion that, as Gardner was beyond rescuable limits, the master's failure to make the attempt had no causal connection with the seaman's death. Judgment was entered for the respondents. 190 F. Supp. 143 (E.D. Va. 1960).

The survival of a seaman adrift at sea depends in large measure upon the diligence of those who are required by law to look for him. If they default in their duty, death is made certain. In recognition of this unyielding truth the admiralty law annexes to a seaman's contract of employment an obligation on the part of the master to use every reasonable means to save the seaman's life if he goes overboard. Harris v. Pennsylvania R.R., 50 F.2d 866 (4th Cir. 1931). In the cited case, after discussing the established obligation of the vessel to provide medical care and attendance to an injured seaman, Judge Soper for our court concluded: "Equally clear is the obligation upon the part of the ship to save the life of a sailor who falls overboard through a misadventure, not uncommon in his dangerous calling. It is absurd to admit the duty to extend aid in the lesser emergency, and to deny it in the greater. In both cases, it is implied in the contract that the ship shall use every reasonable means to save the life of a human being who has no other source of help. The universal custom of the sea demands as much wherever human life is in danger. The seaman's contract of employment requires it as a matter of right." Id. at 868-69.

This humanitarian rule, known as the rescue doctrine, has been approved by the Supreme Court, Cortes v. Baltimore Insular Line, 287 U.S. 367, 377 (1932), and followed in other circuits. See Johnson v. United States, 74 F.2d 703 (2d Cir. 1935); Kirincich v. Standard Dredging Co., 112 F.2d 163 (3d Cir. 1940); Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F.2d 503 (2d Cir. 1957; Smith v. Reinauer Oil Transport, 256 F.2d 646 (1st Cir. 1958); Barrios v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 290 F.2d 310 (5th Cir. 1961).[1]

The instant case presents no unheard of situation. Not infrequently, a seaman disappears from his vessel under unknown circumstances, and before he is reported missing several hours have elapsed since he was last seen. It can indeed be speculated, as the respondents suggest, that the seaman slipped, fainted or otherwise involuntarily went overboard, or that he entered the water bent on self-destruction. Likewise, it is conceivable that he was killed in the fall, cut to pieces by the propeller or drowned immediately; also, there may be speculation as to the precise point in time when these events occurred. But only one thing is known with certainty: often seaman who fall overboard survive for many hours in the water.[2]

---

[1] A number of district court cases have applied the doctrine. United States v. Knowles, 26 Fed. Cas. 800 (No. 15,540) (D.C. N.D. Cal. 1864); Salla v. Hellman, 7 F.2d 953 (S.D. Cal. 1925); The G. W. Glenn, 4 F. Supp. 727 (D. Del. 1933); Tompkins v. Pilots Ass'n for Bay and River Delaware, 32 F. Supp. 439 (E.D. Pa. 1940); Ferro v. United States Lines Co. 74 F. Supp 250 (S.D. N.Y. 1947); Petition of Trans-Pacific Fishing & Packing Co., 152 F. Supp. 44 (W.D. Wash. 1957); Tate v. C. G. Willis, Inc., 154 F. Supp. 402 (E.D. Va. 1957); Tweedy v. Esso Standard Oil Co., 190 F. Supp. 437 (S.D. N.Y. 1960).

[2] At trial, libellant tendered proof of the high proportion of successful sea rescues conducted by the Allies during World War II. This revealed a large number of successes following as much as

The decisive question is, what was the master's duty in the present circumstances? The court found as a fact that turning back would have entailed no risk. The only thing that would have been lost in attempting rescue was time; the Bulkcrude might have reached its destination a half day late, at the most.

We hold that under the facts here the master did not do all that was required of him.[3]

The District Court, as we have noted, arrived at its conclusion exonerating the respondents by accepting their unsupported and unwarranted deduction that, because Gardner was last seen at 6:00 p.m., he must have gone overboard shortly thereafter and was surely beyond reach at 11:30 p.m. We think the court was in error in its basic premise that Gardner went overboard soon after he was last seen. In truth, no one could really know with any twenty-four hours in the water. Perhaps, however, the most striking example of a man's ability to survive is found in Petition of Trans-Pacific Fishing & Packing Co., 152 F. Supp. 44 (W.D. Wash. 1957). There a seaman was saved after he "swam, drifted and treaded water for about 56 hours after he was swept overboard." Id. at 46.

---

[3] We are mindful of other circuit court decisions excusing the master's failure to search the waters. See Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F.2d 503 (2d Cir. 1957). That case, however, was tried on the theory that the seaman had committed suicide, and the court declined to presume in such circumstances that he changed his mind and could have been saved by a reasonable search. See also, Barrios v. Waterman SS. Corp., 290 F.2d 310 (5th Cir. 1961). On the other hand, in Salla v. Hellman, 7 F.2d 953 (S.D. Cal. 1925), a master's failure to attempt rescue of a seaman who fell overboard during a storm established liability, even though there was no affirmative showing that an attempt would have succeeded. See also, Kirincich v. Standard Dredging Co., 112 F.2d 163 (3d Cir. 1940).

degree of certainty whether the fatal plunge occurred five minutes after he was last seen, or five minutes before he was reported missing, or at what intervening moment. Unless a search was made by that or other vessels in the area, it could not be determined that Gardner was beyond rescue. This is the classic situation which in reason and humanity called for the exertion of every reasonable effort to ascertain his whereabouts. We need not define how far or how extensive a search was called for in order to constitute a good faith performance of the ship's obligation. We hold only that refusal to make any effort whatever cannot be justified.

Proximate cause, the ship urges, has not been proved. Failure to reverse her course and conduct a search, the argument runs, does not of itself account for the death, since it has not been definitely shown that the man was alive and could have been saved. But this view ignores the underlying character of the duty. It was less than a duty to rescue him, but it wa positive duty to make a sincere attempt at rescue. The duty is of such nature that its omission will contribute to cause the seaman's death. The duty arises when there is a reasonable possibility of rescue. Proximate cause is tested by the same standard, i.e., causation is proved if the master's omission destroys the reasonable possibility of rescue. Harris v. Pennsylvania R.R., 50 F.2d 866, 869 (4th Cir. 1931). Therefore, proximate cause here is implicit in the breach of duty. Indeed, the duty would be empty if it did not itself embrace the loss as a consequence of its breach. Once the evidence sustains the reasonable possibility of rescue, ample or narrow, according to the circumstances, total disregard of the duty, refusal to make even a try, as was the case here, imposes liability.

Moreover, the master's default—virtually complete—is emphasized by another consequence flowing therefrom. It obliterated all possibility of evidence to prove whether a search, if undertaken, would have succeeded or failed. This alone has in analogous situations been considered a sufficient ground to faster responsibility on the wrongdoer.[4] However, we do not rest our decision on this principle.

---

[4] In a negligence case the Supreme Court of Canada has said:

"What, then, the culpable actor has done by his initial negligent act is, first, to have set in motion a dangerous force which embraces the injured person within the scope of its probable mischief; and next, in conjunction with circumstances which he must be held to contemplate, to have made more difficult if not impossible the means of proving the possible damaging results of his own act or the similar results of the act of another. He has violated not only the victim's substantive right to security, but he has also culpably impaired the latter's remedial right of establishing liability. By confusing his act with environmental conditions, he has, in effect, destroyed the victim's power of proof.

"The legal consequence of that is, I should say, that the onus is then shifted to the wrongdoer to exculpate himself; * * *." Cook v. Lewis, [1951] Can. Sup. Ct. 830, 823-33, [1952] 1 Dom. L. Rep. 1, 3-4 (1951).

This quote is from the concurring opinion by Judge Rand, but it is in line with the expressed view of Judge Cartwright writing for the majority. [1951] Can. Sup. Ct. at 842-43, [1952] 1 Dom. L. Rep. at 18.

To the same effect is Landers v. East Texas Salt Water Disposal Co., 151 Tex. 251, 248 S.W. 2d 731 (1952). There two actors had done independent acts resulting in the pollution of a stream, and the court relieved the plaintiff of his burden of proving the extent to which the defendant and other causes, respectively, contributed to the injury. The court applied the principle that where a wrongdoer has united his tortious conduct with other causes resulting in injury to another, justice dicates that he may not take advantage of the fact that he has thereby prevented the injured person from demonstrating the defendant's share in the resulting injury. See also, Summers v. Tice, 33 Cal. 2d 80, 199 P.2d 1 (1948); Meier

The respondents offer no acceptable explanation of the master's conduct. They seek to justify it by the argument that unavoidable passage of time and distance relieved him of the duty to do more than he did. They develop this defense as a conclusion from two premises: first, they say that the master had no duty to stop the Bulkcrude while she was being searched to ascertain whether Gardner was still aboard; and second, that since the vessel steamed on during the search for an hour and a half after Gardner was reported missing, all possibility of then conducting an effective search of the waters was thereby erased. The defense is unacceptable.

We do not imply that in every case immediately upon word of a seaman's absence from his watch all progress of the ship must be halted and the ship reversed for rescue operations while a search is made aboard for the seaman. It is realized that the master is called upon to make his decision on the basis of uncertain fact.

We hold that the burden of the risk involved in the master's inaction must be cast by the law on him and the ship, and not on the helpless man in the water. If the rescue doctrine is not to be utterly stultified, this must be the rule. The grave obligation of rescue is not to be satisfied

---

v. Holt, 347 Mich. 430, 436, 80 N.W. 2d 207, 213 (1956) (dissent); Harris v. Cleveland, 294 S.W.2d 235, 241 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956). Prosser describes the rule as requiring the defendant to "exonerate itself or pay." Prosser, Torts, 207-08, 230-31 (2d ed. 1955).

Analogously, there has long existed a rule of evidence that if a party intentionally or fraudulently destroys a written document with the intent to suppress evidence, its content is presumed to have been detrimental to him. Omnia praesumnuntur contra spoliatorem. See Berthold-Jennings Lumber Co. v. St Louis, I.M. & S. Ry., 80 F.2d 32, 41 (8th Cir. 1935).

merely by a search of the vessel. A master who abandons a missing seaman while there is yet a reasonable opportunity to save him, acts at his own risk.

In the circumstances of this case, the inaction of the master established a neglect of the duty of rescue—a neglect from which a contributing cause of the seaman's death is fairly and conclusively drawn by law.

Reversed and remanded for the determination of damages.

HAYNSWORTH, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

I agree with the Court's statement of the governing legal principle that duty of search arises when there is a reasonable possibility of rescue. I agree also that if the duty is neglected and the seaman is lost, the burden ought not to be upon his representative to establish the fact that he was alive and would have been saved by a reasonable rescue effort. I respectfully disagree, however, with the Court's resolution of the factual issue, for the finding below that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue is amply supported by evidence. Since McAllister v. United States,[1] it is plain that this Court has no power to try the factual issues de novo, or to substitute its appraisal of the facts for that of the District Court when the District Court's findings are not clearly erroneous. We, of course, exceed our appellate powers when we consider findings made by the District Court in disregard of their evidentiary basis or without sufficient regard for the evidence upon which the findings were predicated.

Gardner had been ill. He had missed his preceding watch on that account and was contemplating hospitalization. He was last seen at approximately 1800 in the evening going in the direction of his quarters. The next day footprints were observed on a beam immediately beneath the port in the head just aft of the forecastle in which Gardner was quartered.

At the time, in early December 1958, the Bulkcrude was southbound through the Florida Straits. She was off Tennessee Reef when Gardner was last seen. When Gardner was first missed, approximately five and one-half hours later, the ship had made good eighty-five miles, and, by the time the search of the ship was completed, the Bulkcrude was approximately one hundred and five miles from Tennessee Reef. The weather was clear and the sea calm, but the night was dark and moonless. There was testimony of great danger of one going over the side of a vessel being sucked into the propeller, particularly when the ship is in ballast and riding high as the Bulkcrude was. There was also testimony of danger to one who might avoid the hazard of the propeller from sharks and barracuda. Of even greater importance, there was abundant testimony that the currents over the Bulkcrude's track that night sometimes set in toward the Florida Keys, sometimes out from the Keys. This is readily apparent from the plot of the vessel's track, and all witnesses agreed that, to compute the drift of a floating body in the water, one would require knowledge of the place along the track at which the body entered the water. Without knowing where Gardner went overboard, there was no way to determine whether his drift would be inshore or offshore.

---

[1] 348 U.S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L.Ed. 20.

Under these circumstances, several masters, testifying for the respondent, expressed the opinion that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue. Each of those witnesses testified that, under the circumstances, he would not have turned the ship about had he been in the position of the Bulkcrude's Master. Those witnesses, the Bulkcrude's Master and the Bulkcrude's Mate, all testified that, without more specific information than that Gardner went overboard at sometime between 1800 and 2330, there was no way to tell where to go to look for him, and that unless one knew within reasonable limits where to search, any search would be futile.[2] Moreover, one of the libelant's two witnesses, the Chief of the Search and Rescue Section of the Fifth Coast Guard District, testified that it was "almost impossible" to see a man in the water at night, unless the man in the water was equipped with flares or other special signaling equipment. He further testified that had he been on duty in Miami, he would not have launched a Coast Guard search that night, and if he launched one the next day, it would not have been very extensive because of the circumstances and the wide expanse of water to be covered.

The Coast Guard Chief Warrant Officer on duty in Miami, who received the Bulkcrude's message early on the morning of December 9, testified that he initiated no rescue effort because, in his opinion, rescue was impossible. He said there was such uncertainty as to the time and place where Gardner went overboard that any search that night or the next day was impractical. Even if he had known where Gardner went overboard, he would not have launched a Coast Guard search during the hours of darkness, but would have sent a plane after sunrise. Not knowing where to send the plane, however, none was sent. He did send a series of All Ships Broadcasts notifying other shipping in the Straits to be on the lookout for Gardner. Further steps he thought were futile and impractical, and no further steps were taken.

---

[2] There is no doubt but that the Master, by questioning all members of the ship's company, did everything he could to obtain more definite information as to when and where Gardner went overboard.

It is apparent that none of these witnesses assumed that Gardner went overboard soon after he was last seen at approximately 1800. Their difficulty arose out of the fact they had no basis for assuming when between 1800 and 2300 he went overboard, and it was on that account that they all agreed that the Master of the Bulkcrude had no basis for deciding where to look for Gardner. There was also general agreement among these witnesses that because of the cross currents and the darkness of the night, there was little or no point in the Bulkcrude reversing her course and proceeding back along her own track. Only one witness, one of the two offered by the libelant, was of the opinion that had the ship been turned on a reciprocal course there was a reasonable possibility that Gardner, if alive and "wiggling in the water," might have been sighted and rescued.

As noted by the majority, several of these witnesses indicated that they would have undertaken some search if they had known that Gardner went overboard shortly before he was missed, for, in that event, they could pinpoint the area of search. With that information, they could determine the ship's approximate location at the time he went overboard, they could compute Gardner's drift, and the ship could proceed to the place where Gardner could be expected to be found, if, indeed, he had survived the other hazards and was still afloat and alive. There was no agreement among the witnesses, as the majority indicates, that without such information some search in a limited area and time should have been or would have been undertaken. On the contrary, all of the respondent's witnesses and one of the two witnesses for the libelant agreed that a search and rescue effort was hopeless under the circumstances which confronted the Bulkcrude's Master that night in the light of the darkness of the night and of the fact that he had no basis for a determination of a search area.

It is true that the District Judge at one point in his opinion said it was more likely that Gardner went overboard shortly after he was last seen at approximately 1800 than at some later time, but earlier in his opinion he recognized that the real problem confronting the Master was the absence of any basis for any rational assumption as to when and where Gardner went overboard. If fault might be found with that later speculation, it was not a general assumption that Gardner went overboard shortly after 1800, and it does not defeat the District Court's expressed recognition of the fact that the real and insolvable problem confronting the Master was the fact that nothing was known as to when, during the five and one-half hour period, and where, during the eighty-five miles of travel, Gardner went overboard. If, however, that speculation might be said to have infected the general findings of the District Court, this Court would not be justified in making its own findings in disregard of other specific findings of the District Court, particularly when the District Court's findings are not only clearly erroneous, but are supported by the great weight of the testimony.

I think we exceed the permissible bounds of appellate review when we disregard the abundant testimony supporting the finding that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue of Gardner, or we violate the substantive principle we profess to apply when we insist that there was a reasonable possibility or rescue in the face of the contrary finding below and the abundant evidence which supports it.

I think this case presents only a factual question which was foreclosed by the District Court's findings.

EXCERPTS FROM TESTIMONY

(tr. 229) * * *

EDWIN B. ING, called as a witness by and on behalf of the libellant, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION

Q. Well, Captain, what would be your practice if you received a message at approximately twenty minutes to one in the morning or 12:45 a.m. or 0040?

A. Again, I'm sorry, I have to ask for more information. I would still have to have further information as to the conditions—in other words, I believe you're talking about a man overboard—

Q. Yes.

A. —and as to whether or not he went overboard then, or he was discovered overboard then, and how long it had been before he was last seen, and what he was doing, and so forth and so on. The chances of finding a man at night, if he went overboard, before he was seen to go overboard, without special survival equipment, might be very poor. We might not dispatch anything.

* * *

(tr. 244 * * *

BY THE COURT:

Q. You can see a man in the water better in the daytime than you can at night, can't you?

A. Certainly, yes, sir. As a matter of fact, this is—again, I think we are verging on opinion—I think it is almost impossible to see one at night unless he had signaling equipment, special flare equipment.

BY MR. KELSEY:

Q. You are speaking of seeing them from aircraft, are you not?

A. From anything.

(tr. 245) * * *

BY MR. KELSEY:

Q. Suppose you have searchlights on, not too impossible?

A. It would still be very difficult.

Q. Be very difficult?

A. Unless the individual had some signaling equipment—

* * *

(tr. 249) * * *

BY THE COURT:

Q. Captain, if the message you received— and this is assuming that you were at Miami—read substantially as follows—you received this message at approximately 1:00 a.m. in the morning—that a seaman was missing from a ship; that he had last been seen at approximately 6:00 p.m. the night before in a place that was then about 104 miles from the place where the ship was then located, but they gave you the location of the place where he was last seen while on board the vessel, what practice would you follow under such circumstances?

A. I don't think I would launch a search, Your Honor; however, in that case, we would have tried to notify all ships. However, this message that reported the missing man probably was—possibly was a safety or an emergency signal to all ships to keep a lookout in the vicinity. Under those conditions, if we did launch a search, I don't think it would have been at night. I think we probably, at least, would have waited until the morning.

* * *

(tr. 250) * * *

Q. (By Mr. Kelsey) You think you would start the search in the morning. You did say that?

MR. SYKES: He did not.

A. I say, if I started one, I probably would have waited until morning, but there are other circumstances that would have affected that, and that would have been the availability of aircraft—search and rescue aircraft—and the weather conditions at the time.

BY THE COURT:

Q. Assuming that the weather was what we would call "ideal," smooth sea and very little wind, and so on—

A. Yes, we would probably have launched a search, but not until morning. It might not have been a very intensive search because of the circumstances and, I'd say, low probability of finding a man without special equipment, however, over a rather wide expanse of water.

* * *

(tr. 253) * * *

Q. All right. Now, seeing the track of this vessel, as I have said, between Alligator Reef and Dry Tortugas south of the Keys, in the daytime or at the first light in the morning, tell us what difficulties, if any, would be involved in the search of this track approximately 104 miles long that you could, at the present time, see?

A. The difficulties would involve primarily the ability to detect the person in the water without the necessary—without extra equipment.

Q. I am speaking of—

BY MR. SYKES:

Q. What do you mean by "extra equipment"?

A. A raft, a lifejacket, signaling equipment—a berry pistol, I mean—and, oh maybe even a parachute—part of anything that is normally issued to a single seater military aircraft.

BY MR. KELSEY:

Q. Are you speaking of daytime or nighttime now?

A. Daytime also.

Q. Daytime also?

A. Of course, it's easier in the daytime and the prob-(tr. 254) ability is better in the daytime, but, even so, a man in the water without any special equipment is not a good target.

* * *

CAPTAIN JOHN R. McINTYRE

(tr. 372) * * *

Q. You told us that at Carysfort Light the vessel was being set in; at Mollasses Light the vessel was being set in; at Alligator Light the vessel was being set out; Tennessee Light, it was being set in; Sombrero Light, it was being set out; American Shoal Light, it was being set in; Sand Key Light, it was being set out; Cosgrove Light, it was being set out; Rebecca Light, it was being set out. Now, will you tell us what that indicates with reference to the nature of the currents that were being encountered as the vessel proceeded along that particular section of the coast?

A. Well, it indicates that on certain legs of the voyage—

(tr. 373) Q. Keep your voice up.

A. I say it indicates on certain legs of the voyage that the vessel had encountered currents that were setting the vessel offshore and, in other legs, it was setting it inshore.

* * *

Q. Captain, let me rephrase the latter part of my question, then. If you had been master of the BULKCRUDE under those circumstances, what would you have done, sir, with reference to going back to look for Mr Gardner?

A. Well, on completion of the search, not finding the man, I would have sent a radio to the Coast Guard notifying them of the circumstances and conditions and known (tr. 378) facts and, of course, I would very carefully have considered all the circumstances surrounding this case, and from what I can see, there would be no possible hope of—not knowing what time a man disappeared as to where to look for him, without having an object in view, that is, a definite place to go where to look, there would be no good served in turning the vessel around because you would be going back aimlessly, not knowing where to look.

Q. Do I gather from your answer that you would not have gone back?

* * *

Q. Captain, so that I will understand it—everybody seems to understand it but me—would you have gone back? That is the question I want an answer to.

A. No.

* * *

Q. Captain, coming to one other thing you mentioned. I gave you the circumstances of Mr. Gardner's disappearance, the fact that he could not be located aboard. Assuming you were master of that ship and assuming that it had been reported to you at 2340 on December 8, 1958, that Mr. Gardner could not be found to stand his midnight watch, and let's assume further that you had called some of your officers and crew together to make a search for him, would you or would you not have stopped your vessel at its 2340 position on December 9th while that search was being made, sir?

A. No, I wouldn't have stopped the vessel.

* * *

Q. All right, sir. Now, Captain, if you had been master of this ship under the circumstances that I have outlined, would you have thought there was any reasonable probability of finding Robert Gardner if you had turned back, sir?

A. Well, after examining the facts that were made known to me, the course and position of the ship—the position is unknown—the time—where the man disappeared from, I can—unless you had a point, an object to look for I don't see how you could possibly find him, and the chances of finding him are extremely remote—very re-
(tr. 389) mote, in the darkness, together.

* * *

CAPT. WALTER N. PRENGEL

* * *

BY MR. SYKES:

Q. Would you have turned around, Captain, is the question I asked you, if you had been master of the BULKCRUDE, under those circumstances?

A. Absolutely not.

* * *

Q. Now, Captain, one other question along that line. If you had been master of the BULKCRUDE and it had (tr. 470) been reported to you at 2340 that they could not find Mr. Gardner for the twelve midnight watch, would you have stopped the vessel at that point to make your search or would you have continued on while making your search?

A. If I was master of the BULKCRUDE, I would not have stopped my ship, for one reason. At first, I'd have to make a search of the ship to really find if the crew member was missing. In my experience, we have had crew members missing that were found in other quarters, that were found playing cards, found asleep in the lifeboats, found asleep on the mast tables, found asleep in the storerooms, but it had taken quite a few hours before we'd find them, but as far as retracking my ship back—he might have been lost—the crew member might have been lost anywhere from six o'clock to 11:40 at night, and after I completed my search, I'd notify the Coast Guard, and from six o'clock at night to 11:40 it was a distance of over eighty-five miles. I do not know when this man went overboard; I do not know where; and I, as master, where am I going to look for this crew member that's missing in the sea?

* * *

CAPT. HAROLD B. ADAMS

* * *

(tr. 505) * * *

BY MR. SYKES:

Q. Now, Captain, with the assumptions that I have asked you to make and if you had been master of that vessel, would you have turned your vessel around to go back and look for Mr. Gardner, under those circumstances?

A. No, no.

Q. You would not? Would you tell the Court why you would not have gone back?

A. Well, I would have investigated the crew to determine when the man was last seen, and according to the logbook, it was off Tennessee Reef about six o'clock in the evening, and it was now in the neighborhood of one o'clock in the morning, after we had determined—completed a search; that I had advanced probably a hundred or more miles. It was a dark night. If I'd have turned around and gone back, it would be daylight by the time I got back to the assumed position, but due to the Gulf Stream and the tidal current, the question would have been where was the man if he had gone overboard, and I didn't have any evidence to show that—to pinpoint where a man had gone overboard or had, in any way, shape, manner or form—in other words, it would have been purely specula-

(tr. 506) tion on my part, and it would have been so remote possibility that I would have kept right on.

* * *

Q. Captain, from your experience in going to sea and your experience in matters of this type, if it had been reported to you as master of this vessel that the man had been called for his twelve to four watch and could not be found, would you have stopped your vessel at that time to make your search; and if not, just what would you have done?

A. No, I wouldn't have stopped my ship to make this search.

* * *

CAPT. GLEN CHAFFIN

* * *

Q. You were still being set out. Captain, from your (tr. 579) testimony, it is clear that at some lights you were being set in and at others you were being set out. Does this set have any connection with the currents at all; and if so, what connection does it have? What does it indicate with reference to the currents?

A. It indicates that certain places along the Florida reefs you'll set in and certain places you'll set out. It's consistent every trip. The sets will change from trip to trip.

Q. Does that indicate a variable current in that region?

A. A variable current, yes, sir.

* * *

Q. That is all, sir. Now, Captain, did you interrogate any other members of the crew as to whether anybody else had seen him; and if so, whom did you interrogate and what information did you receive, sir?

A. Every man on the ship was asked at the last time he had seen Mr. Gardner.

* * *

(tr. 594) * * *

BY MR. SYKES:

Q. Did your ship pick up that all ships broadcast?

A. Yes, sir, we did.

Q. Now, Captain, after those messages were sent or after you completed your search—let me put it that way—did you give consideration to turning your vessel back to look for Mr. Gardner?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. All right, sir. Now, tell us what consideration you gave; what factors did you consider?

A. Well, I plotted the—already had the position—approximate position of where he was last seen and I had the position we were at the present time, which was a time elapsed of seven hours and was roughly a hundred miles, or slightly more, and there was no reasonable probability in turning back on a dark night, such as it was, to try and search for a man that had been—that we didn't know where he went overboard. We didn't know whether he did go overboard or not. We weren't sure of anything. We had no position to search, no place to search, and in our search, we found that his work shoes, his work clothes, (tr. 595) were not there. If he had went over the side, he apparently went over with these clothes on, and they were a heavy pair of work shoes, and if he'd have escaped the screw, which, as we all know, has a very great suction, he was in shark infested and barracuda infested waters, and it was—there just wasn't—it was beyond any reasonable—it wasn't reasonably practical that he would—that he would—there would be any chance of finding him.

* * *

CWO ERNEST L. FULLER

* * *

Q. Why didn't you dispatch a ship to that area, that vicinity, that night?

MR. POST: Note my objection.

A. There are several reasons. No. 1: It was nighttime. I will come back and elaborate a little more later. No. 2: There was a time element involved. They said that had last (d. 11) seen the man, I believe, about six o'clock in the evening. That was in the vicinity of Tennessee Reef. This was around one, which was a period of almost seven hours later. Not having any specific point to look for a man overboard, it is impractical at night. It is hard enough to find a man in the water in the daytime, let alone at night. Therefore, there were no units dispatched to look for this man. Had we had a specific area to look for, we would have sent a plane come daylight the next morning. That is the usual procedure; but not having any definite position to look for him, we don't—I mean we can't go and cover the whole ocean looking for a man in the water, out in the dark there, and having no light or signal apparatus.

You have to assume the man fell overboard. If he did fall overboard, naturally he wouldn't prepare himself before he did. So nothing was sent to look for him. We did all we could in this matter, which was to put out an All Ships broadcast with the vaguest remote possibility that some ship might stumble on him.

* * *

Q. (By Mr. Humkey) Referring to Respondents' Exhibit 3 for identification, which is the All Ships bulletin or dispatch from the United States Coast Guard office in Miami, how many times did that go out to ships in the vicinity?

A. This is something—I never thought of it.

COMMANDER DAVENPORT: It is up here (indicating).

THE WITNESS: Yes. This was sent out three times, broadcast three times; immediately on receipt by the radio station and twice after that on the hour.

Title 46 U. S. Code Section 688:

> "Any seaman who shall suffer personal injury in the course of his employment may, at his election, maintain an action for damages at law, with the right of trial by jury, and in such action statutes of the United States modifying or extending the common-law right or remedy in cases of personal injury to railway employees shall apply; and in case of the death of any seaman as a result of any such personal representative of such seaman may maintain an action for damages at law with the right of trial by jury, and in such action all statutes of the United States conferring or regulating the right of action for death in the case of railway employees shall be applicable. Jurisdiction in such actions shall be under the court of the district in which the defendant employer resides or in which his principal office is located. Mar. 4, 1915, c. 153, § 20, 38 Stat. 1185; June 5, 1920, c. 250, § 33, 41 Stat. 1007."

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U. S.

Office-Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
JAN 28 1963
JOHN F. DAVIS, CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1962.

No. 711

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., In personam,
And the SS BULKCRUDE, In rem,
Petitioners

V.

MRS. VALERIE JEAN GARDNER, As Administratrix
of the Estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., Deceased,
Respondent

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

OPPOSITION BRIEF OF RESPONDENT GARDNER

SIDNEY H. KELSEY
1408 Maritime Tower
Norfolk 10, Virginia
Counsel for Respondent

INDEX

	Page
OPINIONS BELOW	1
JURISDICTION	2
QUESTION PRESENTED	2
STATUTES INVOLVED	3
COUNTER STATEMENT OF CASE	3
ARGUMENT	5
1. The Decision Below is Clearly Right	5
2. There is no Conflict of decisions nor important question of Federal Law	9
CONCLUSION	11

CITATIONS

Automobile Devices Co. v Automobile Devices Co. of Pa 292 F2d 663 (3rd Cir. 1961)	8
Barrios v Waterman SS Corp. 290 F2d 310 (5th Cir. 1961)	9
Cortes v Baltimore Insular Lines 287 U.S. 367 (1932)	5
DeZon v American President Lines 318 U.S. 660 (1942)	5
Fahs v Taylor 239 F2d 224 (5th Cir. 1956) cert. denied 353 U.S. 936 77 S. Ct. 812, 1 L. ed 2d 759	7
Gediman v Anheuser Busch, Inc. 299 F2d 537 (2nd Cir. 1962)	7, 8
Harris v Pennsylvania Railroad Company 50 F2d 866 (4th Cir. 1931)	5

CITATIONS (Continued)

	Page
The Iroquois 194 U.S. 240 (1904)	8
McAllister v United States 348 US 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L ed 20 (1954)	6
Miller v Farrell Lines, Inc. 247 F2d 503 (2nd Cir. 1957)	9
Vaughan v Atkinson __US__, 82 S. Ct.__ 8 L ed 2d 88 (1962)	5, 6

STATUTES INVOLVED

The Jones Act. 46 U.S.C., 688 incorporating the Federal Employers Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. 51	3

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1962.

No. 711

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., In personam,
And the SS BULKCRUDE, In rem,
Petitioners

V.

MRS. VALERIE JEAN GARDNER, As Administratrix
of the Estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., Deceased,
Respondent

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

OPPOSITION BRIEF OF RESPONDENT

OPINIONS BELOW

The Opinion of the District Court (App. 1-9 of the Petition) is reported at 190 F Supp. 143. The unanimous Opinion of the en banc Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit[1], (per Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff) reversing the District Court, was rendered July 31, 1962. A Petition for Rehearing was filed (by Petitioner shipowner here) and on October 26, 1962 rehearing was denied. The en banc Court on the same date amended certain paragraphs of its Opinion previously rendered and filed its Amended Opinion, one member of the Court dissenting. The Amended Opinion of the Court and the dissent is not yet reported but is printed in the Appendix of the Petition at pp. 18-31.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdictional requisites are set forth in the Petition.

QUESTION PRESENTED

In this Jones Act (46 USC 688) case, seaman Gardner was sent for to stand watch at 11:30 P. M., December 8, 1958 while his vessel was off the Florida Keys on a voyage from New York to Corpus Christi. He could not be found. Inquiry revealed that no one had seen him since supper at 6:00 P. M. The Master nevertheless kept steaming on his course and speed while a search of the vessel was made which revealed that Gardner was overboard. Reporting this by wireless to the Coast Guard, the Master still continued on and maintained his same course and speed without turning about or making any rescue attempts. He arrived at Corpus Christi on scheduled time two days later. The question presented is:

---

1. Argument was first had before a three judge panel on Oct. 10, 1961. The Court thereafter on April 6, 1962 ordered reargument en banc. Title 28 USC Sec. 46 (c) authorizes rehearings en banc when ordered by a majority of the Circuit Judges of the Circuit in active service and the en banc Court consists of all of the active Circuit Judges of the Circuit.

Whether or not the Master is under a duty to use every reasonable means to try to save the life of his crewman overboard in the sea.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The Statutes involved are The Jones Act, 46 USC 688 incorporating by its terms the Federal Employers Liability Act, 45 USC 51.

COUNTER STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This counter statement of the case is deemed necessary in correcting certain substantial and important inaccuracies and omissions in the shipowner's Petition. The deceased seaman Gardner, a crewman of the Petitioner shipowner's vessel BULKCRUDE, left New York with the vessel on December 3, 1958 for a voyage to Corpus Christi, Texas. On December 8th while the vessel was off the Florida Keys, Gardner became ill and the Master relieved him of his noonday 12 to 4 watch. Petitioner's statement (Petition p. 4) that Gardner was ill from drinking is wholly without evidence. Gardner had supper with the rest of the crew at 6:00 P. M. The vessel was steaming at approximately 15 knots per hour through the warm smooth waters around the Florida Keys. There was no wind, the seas were calm and the water temperature was 82° Farenheit. When another seaman went to call Gardner in his room for his midnight 12 to 4 watch he could not be found. Notwithstanding, the Master continued on his course and speed of 15 knots per hour and a search of the vessel definitely revealed that Gardner was not on the vessel and was overboard in the sea. The Master took no action whatsoever but maintained his same course and speed, merely reporting Gardner's disappearance to the Coast Guard, which in turn advised the ships in the area to be on the lookout for Gardner. In reporting to the Coast Guard the Master failed to give the location of his ship or the track or course traversed since Gardner was last seen at suppertime, 6:00 P. M. The Master made his scheduled time of arrival in Corpus Christi two days later. He admitted that he made no attempt to rescue Gardner nor requested assistance from either the Coast Guard or other ships in the area to look for Gardner. He further admitted that his own inaction in failing to turn around to try to find Gardner precluded any probabilities of saving Gardner's life. Indeed the Coast Guard officer stated that he could not send search planes or ships because the Master had not given his course and position when reporting that Gardner was missing. Both of the shipowner's expert Master Mariner witnesses stated that they would have turned the ship around and retraced the course at least an hour or an hour and a half after the search revealed Gardner was not on board. Gardner was known to be an excellent swimmer and World War II statistics on rescue were introduced showing that approximately 70% of men were rescued after their ships had sunk. Indeed the Coast Guard Rescue Plan showed that the probabilities of rescue within three day's were excellent for a man in warm or tropical waters such as these.

The District Court dismissed the Libel of Gardner's widow holding that the Master's failure to make even the slightest attempt to save the life of Gardner would not render liability unless it were shown that if the Master had made any attempts to rescue, these attempts would be successful. The Court of Appeals reversed holding that under these circumstances where there was a complete failure to even try or attempt to perform the duty to rescue, this amounted to an abandonment of the crewman to his fate and the shipowner was liable.

ARGUMENT

1. THE DECISION BELOW IS CLEARLY RIGHT.

The Fourth Circuit in its often quoted decision enunciating the rescue doctrine in Harris v Pennsylvania Railroad Company, 50 F2nd 866 (1931), held:

> ". . . it is implied in the contract that the ship shall use every reasonable means to save the life of a human being who has no other source of help. The universal custom of the sea demands as much wherever human life is in danger. The seaman's contract of employment requires it as a matter of right." (50 F2nd 868) (Emphasis ours)

The shipowner owes his crewman certain positive and affirmative duties, the shirking of which renders the shipowner liable, such as the failure to provide medical treatment, The Iroquois, 194 U.S. 240 (1904); the failure to pay maintenance, Vaughan v Atkinson, ___US___, 82 S. Ct.___, 8 L ed 288, (1962). This Court specifically set forth the positive and affirmative duty of the Master to rescue his crewman in Cortes v Baltimore Insular Lines, 287 US 367, 377 (1932), stating:

> "There is little doubt that rescue is a duty when a sailor falls into the sea, United States v Knowles (D. C. 4 Sawy. 517 Fed. Cas. No. 15,540, and that a liability to respond in damages is cast upon the shipowner if he is abandoned to his fate. Harris v Pennsylvania R. Co., (CCA 4th), 50 F (2nd) 866, supra."

These duties admit of ". . . no merely perfunctory discharge," DeZon v American President Lines, 318 US 660, 667 (1942). When these affirmative duties are shirked or disregarded by the shipowner, liability must be imposed. If the shipowner could escape liability when its Master has done absolutely nothing for his crewman in distress, this would render the positive duty to rescue nugatory. Cf. Vaughan v Atkinson, __US.__, 82 SCt.__, 8 L ed 288 (1962). The Court of Appeals was clearly right in imposing liability here where the Master totally failed to make even a try to rescue but abandoned Gardner to his fate.

The Petitioner shipowner gives as a reason for granting certiorari that the Court of Appeals ignored the decision of this Court in McAllister v United States, 348 US 19, 75 S Ct. 6, 99 L ed 20 (1954) holding that the Court of Appeals should not set aside the District Court's findings of fact, unless they are clearly erroneous. McAllister further held however that "a finding is clearly erroneous when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing Court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." (348 US 20). But the facts in this case are not in dispute. The District Court did not have to weigh or make a choice between conflicting facts and thereupon make a finding. The shipowner concedes and admits that the Master did not make the slightest effort or attempt to try to rescue or save the life of his crewman, and the shipowner's own expert Master Mariners recognize the duty to turn the ship around and try to search for and try to rescue Gardner. Indeed the District Court stated in its Opinion that "admittedly, in the present case, the Master of the vessel did nothing by way of search for the missing man overboard other than to notify the Coast Guard." (App. p. 6 of Petition) Further, Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the Fourth Circuit, in both the original and amended Opinion of the en banc Court, after reciting the details of the Master's inaction, stated that: "These facts are not in controversy." (App. pp. 9, 10, 18, 19 of Petition.) Even the Petitioner shipowner itself on page 4 of the Petition states:

> "Basically there was little conflict in the testimony offered on behalf of libellant and respondents."

We do not have here a case where the Court of Appeals has overturned the District Court's findings of fact nor substituted its own findings for that of the District Court. The decisive question on appeal was, "What was the Master's duty under the circumstances of this case" (App. p. 22 of Petition) which is an issue of law, and the Court held that the Master had failed in his duty to rescue reversing the District Court for exonerating the Master. Further the Court held that the District Court was in error in its basic assumption or conclusion (completely without inference in the evidence) that Gardner went overboard soon after he was last seen at suppertime, 6:00 P. M. and that rescue would not be successful.

On the contrary the Petitioner shipowner even stipulated at trial that it had no knowledge when Gardner went overboard. In fact he could have gone overboard just prior to the search for him at 11:30 P M. or during the search when the Master had positive knowledge of his disappearance but notwithstanding he continued on steaming at his same speed of 15 knots separating Gardner from his only means of rescue.

Where there is no dispute as to basic evidentiary facts (such as the Master's total inaction here) the Court of Appeals may review an assumption or conclusion of the District Court (such as Gardner being overboard at 6:00 P. M.) free from restraint of the "clearly erroneous" rule. Faks v. Taylor, 239 F2nd 224 (5th Cir. 1956), cert. den. 353 US 936, 77 SCt. 812, 1 L ed 2d 759; Gediman v. Anheuser Busch, Inc., 299 F2d 537 (2d Cir. 1962); Automotive Devices Co. v. Automotive Devices Co. of Pa., 292 F2d 663 (3d Cir. 1961).

On the other hand if it should be thought that there were material conflicts in the evidence which the District Court had to resolve and make a finding thereon, then it is quite clear that the en banc Court of Appeals consisting of five Circuit Judges regarded the District Court's findings as clearly erroneous or even though such findings were supported by evidence, the Court was left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake had been committed by the District Court, giving them the right to reverse the District Court under McAllister v. United States, 348 US 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L ed 20 (1954). And indeed on the Amended Opinion there remained four Circuit Judges including the Chief Judge who were firmly convinced of the error of the District Judge although one Judge changed his vote on filing the amended opinion. But the dissenting Judge agreed with the majority on the positive duty of the Master to use all means to effect rescue. He also agreed that the burden ought not to be on the widow to show that the seaman was alive and would have been saved by a reasonable rescue effort.

The Court of Appeals heid that the Master's failure of duty contributed to Gardner's death and that he took the chance or risk of Gardner's drowning when he abandoned him without the slightest effort to save him. The Petitioner shipowner claims that the burden of showing causation has been placed on him. The same claim was made without success where a Master failed in an analogous positive duty to provide medical attention in The Iroquois, 194 US 240, 247, 48 L ed 955, 960 stating:

> "To put it in a light most favorable to the master, he speculated upon the chance that the union of the > bones had taken place, without seeking to inform himself of the fact. The courts below held that the master did not discharge, as he should have done, the claim of humanity which the serious nature of the injury and the helpless condition of the libellant imposed upon him."

The Master in this case should not be exonerated from his failure to perform his positive duty to try to save the life of his crewman overboard. The Master should not be allowed to steam on in the comfort of his cabin leaving his crewman helpless in the sea.

II. THERE IS NO CONFLICT OF DECISIONS NOR IMPORTANT QUESTION OF FEDERAL LAW REQUIRING REVIEW

The Petition is not satisfying in showing that this case comes within the classes of cases which may be reviewed as set forth in Supreme Court Rule 19. Petitioner shipowner claims that this case is in conflict with the Fifth Circuit decision in Barrios v. Waterman S. S. Corp. 290 F2d 310 (1961) and the Second Circuit decision in Miller v. Farrell Lines, Inc., 247 F2d 503 (1957). Both of these cases were considered by Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff in the en banc opinion (App. p. 22 n. 2 of Petition) of the Court of Appeals. Neither were helpful to the Court nor relevant to this case since they turned on their own particular facts and were primarily tried on grounds other than this case.

For example in the Barrios case, supra, the District Court's Findings of Facts and Conclusions of law (App. 1) show that liability was claimed because of negligence of the ship in causing the deceased to fall overboard. In the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit the failure to rescue doctrine was claimed for the first time but not seriously relied on, as the Court states in it's opinion (290 F2d 311) that the appellant's primary argument was negligence in not having a bow watch. Further the Court states that the vessel ". . . at that time was encountering very heavy weather, with winds of gale force and was unable to return to search for the missing seaman" (290 F2d 311).

In the instant case it is admitted that the vessel was in tropical waters off the Florida Keys, with calm seas and no wind which were ideal conditions for rescue. It is impossible for the Petitioner to raise by comparison any conflict of principle between this case and Barrios, supra, to warrant review by this Court.

Petitioner claims that this case is also in conflict with the Miller case, supra. But the Miller case was tried on the ground the ship failed to restrain and prevent the seaman from committing suicide. (247 F2d 503, 506). Advancement of this ground for liability destroyed any theory of failure to rescue as Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff pointed out in the Opinion below (App. 22 n. 3 of Petition) " . . . the Court declined to presume in such circumstances that he changed his mind and could have been saved by a reasonable search." Nevertheless in Miller, supra, the Master turned the ship around and made a frantic seven hour search although the seaman was first missed eleven hours after he had last been seen. We have no inferences of suicide in the instant case and the evidence was quite to the contrary.

Where the Courts of Appeal are not in conflict in applying proper principles and standards, just because the decisions are different on their particular factual situations, this does not bring such decisions within Supreme Court Rule 19, which may be regarded for review by the Supreme Court.

Additionally the Petition fails to show the importance of any issue of Federal law which would necessitate review. There is no contention made as to the interpretation or application of the Jones Act, 46 U. S. C. 688 under which this libel was filed. It cannot be contended that the duty to rescue has not been fully recognized and enforced for many years. While important to the parties here, this decision decides nothing new or important to anyone else as the obligation to attempt a rescue of the ship's crew is universally known as a legal duty.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons it is respectfully submitted that this Petition for a Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

Respectfully Submitted,

SIDNEY H. KELSEY,
Counsel for Respondent Gardner

SIDNEY H. KELSEY
(Ralph Rabinowitz on Brief)
1408 Maritime Tower
Norfolk 10, Virginia
Attorney for Respondent

In the United States District Court

In And For The Southern District of Florida

Tampa Division

DIGNA BARRIOS, As Administratrix of the Estate of MARIO BARRIOS, Deceased,

Plaintiff

v.

WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION,

Defendant

No. 3723 - Civ-T

FILED.
TAMPA, FLA.
May 25, 1960

JULIAN A. BLAKE
CLERK

FINDINGS OF FACT, CONCLUSIONS OF LAW, AND FINAL JUDGMENT

This cause came on for final hearing, and the Court, after considering the pleadings, the evidence, and argument of counsel, being fully advised in the premises, makes the following Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Final Judgment:

1. DIGNA BARRIOS, as Administratrix of the Estate of MARIO BARRIOS, deceased, brought this action as Plaintiff against WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION, as owner and operator of the vessel, SS TOPA TOPA, alleging that the death of MARIO BARRIOS, as a result of falling from the vessel, was proximately caused by and through the negligence of the Defendant, WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION.

2. The Defendant, answering said Complaint, denied any negligence on its behalf and asserted that as a defense that the death of MARIO BARRIOS was occasioned by his own contributory negligence.

3. On December 18, 1957, the SS TOPA TOPA, owned and operated by WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION, Defendant, departed Yokohama, Japan at approximately 0010 hours.

4. The deceased, MARIO BARRIOS, Ordinary Seaman, crewman on the SS TOPA TOPA, was assigned the bow watch on said vessel from 0000 hours to 0400 hours. At approximately 0230 hours, Crewman Sintes relieved MARIO BARRIOS at his watch on the bow so that he might have coffee. BARRIOS returned to his station as watch on the bow of the SS TOPA TOPA at approximately 0255 hours and was not seen thereafter.

5. At approximately 0335 hours, Crewman Farnham went to the bow of the SS TOPA TOPA to relieve MARIO BARRIOS but did ot find him at his watch. Thinking that BARRIOS had gone for coffee or to secure additional clothing, Farnham took over the bow watch until relieved at approximately 0400 hours by the next watch.

6. The weather upon departing Yokohoma, Japan was good. At approximately 0233 hours, the SS TOPA TOPA encountered rain and smog. At approximately 0400 hours, rain, moderate seas and swells were encountered although visibility had cleared. At 0649 hours, gale force winds and low visibility were encountered.

7. At approximately 0835 hours, the Master of the SS TOPA TOPA, Captain Wallace Royal, was notified by the Chief Mate that Seaman MARIO BARRIOS could not be found. A search party was immediately organized and searched the vessel for MARIO BARRIOS as well as any evidence of foul play, until approximately 1200 hours on December 18, 1957. An urgent message was sent, after it had been ascertained that BARRIOS was not aboard the SS TOPA TOPA, to the Japanese Safety Agency, advising of the disappearance of BARRIOS and the location of the vessel when BARRIOS was last seen at approximately 0255 hours.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

1. The Court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter of this suit.

2. The plaintiff failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Defendant was guilty of any negligence proximately causing the death of the deceased, MARIO BARRIOS.

FINAL JUDGMENT

It is, therefore, ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED as follows:

1. The Plaintiff, DIGNA BARRIOS, as Administratrix of the Estate of MARIO BARRIOS, deceased, recover nothing in this action and that judgment be entered for Defendant, WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION; and that it go hence without day. Defendant, WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION, have and recover of the Plaintiff, DIGNA BARRIOS, as Administratrix of the Estate of MARIO BARRIOS, deceased, its taxable costs in this cause.

DONE and ORDERED in Chambers, at Tampa, Florida, this 25th day of May, 1960.

/s/ GEORGE W. WHITEHURST
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

INDEX

	Page
Statement	1
Misstatements And Erroneous Conclusions In Respondent's Opposition Brief	2
Decision Below Violates McAllister v. United States	8
Conflict Of Decisions	11
Conclusion	15

CITATIONS

Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp. (5 Cir. 1961) 290 F. (2d) 310	11, 12, 13, 15
Harris v. Pennsylvania Railroad Company (4 Cir. 1931) 50 F. (2d) 866	8, 9, 13, 14
McAllister v. United States (1954) 348 U. S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L. Ed. 20	10, 11, 15
Miller v. Farrell Lines, (2 Cir. 1957) 247 F. (2d) 503, Certiorari denied 355 U. S. 912	4, 11, 13, 15

INDEX TO APPENDIX

Complaint in Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp., As Copied From The Transcript Of The Record On Appeal To The United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit 1

Testimony of the Master of the Steamship "Topa Topa" Given Before the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Tampa, Florida, May 16 1960, in the case of Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corporation, as Copied From The Transcript Of The Record On Appeal To The United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit 4

"Statement Of The Case" Shown on Pages 1 and 2 of Brief for Appellant, Filed With the United States Court Of Appeals For The Fifth Circuit In Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corporation 6

"Questions Involved On Appeal And Specification Of Errors", Shown on Page 10 of Brief for Appellant, Filed With the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corporation 7

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1962

No. 711

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., In personam,
And the SS BULKCRUDE, In rem,

Petitioners,

v.

MRS. VALERIE JEAN GARDNER, As Administratrix
of the Estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., Deceased,

Respondent.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

PETITIONERS' REPLY TO OPPOSITION BRIEF OF RESPONDENT GARDNER AND APPENDIX

STATEMENT

The jurisdictional requisites, applicable statutes, opinions below, statement of the case, questions presented and the reasons for granting the Writ of Certiorari have all been dealt with in Petitioners' Petition for a Writ of Certiorari. This reply to Respondent Gardner's Opposition Brief is believed necessary in order to correct certain obvious errors and misstatements therein.

Petitioners will quote from the record to support their charges of errors and misstatements in Respondent's Opposition Brief.

Page references hereinafter given will refer to pages in the Opposition Brief unless otherwise designated.

MISSTATEMENTS AND ERRONEOUS CONCLUSIONS IN RESPONDENT'S OPPOSITION BRIEF

Page 2:

> "* * *. The Master nevertheless kept steaming on his course and speed while a search of the vessel was made which revealed that Gardner was overboard. * * *. (Italics Supplied)

Respondent's above statement that a search of the vessel revealed that Gardner was overboard is untrue. The search merely failed to locate Gardner on the vessel. This is confirmed by the Master's radio message to the Coast Guard at Miami that Gardner was missing, the Coast Guard's reply and its emergency "All Ship's Broadcast", all quoted on page 5 of Petitioners' Petition. The Master testified Respondents-Appellees' Appendix (Bulkcrude), p. 115:

> "A. Well, I plotted the—already had the position-approximate position of where he was last seen and I had the position we were at the present time, which was a time elapsed of seven hours and was roughly a hundred miles, or slightly more, and there was no reasonable probability in turning back on a dark night, such as it was, to try and search for a man that had been—that we didn't know where he went overboard. We didn't know whether he did go overboard or not. We weren't sure of anything. We had no position to search, no place to search, * * *." (Italics Supplied)

Notwithstanding the correctness of the above testimony, Respondent throughout the Opposition Brief attempts to give to this Court the erroneous understanding that Gardner, when first missed, was overboard, that the Master then knew or should have known he was overboard and that liability should be imposed because the Master did not make the same rescue efforts as would have been required had he known that Gardner was overboard and also known when and where he went overboard.

Page 4:

"* * *. He (Master) further admitted that his own inaction in failing to turn around to try to find Gardner precluded any probabilities of saving Gardner's life. * * *." (Italics Supplied)

The Master made no such admission. His testimony was, that under the conditions existing that night, there would have been no reasonable probability of the BULK-CRUDE rescuing Gardner had the Master turned back and attempted a search.

Here, again, Respondent is advancing an erroneous and misleading conclusion, wholly unsupported by evidence. The Master, after consulting with his Chief Officer, concluded that under the circumstances existing that night, there would be no reasonable probability of the Master rescuing Gardner if he turned back and attempted a search. He thereupon promptly notified the Coast Guard that Gardner was missing (not overboard) and the Coast Guard promptly notified all shipping in the area to keep a sharp lookout. The experts, including the Coast Guard officers, in particular Respondent's Captain Ing, Chief of Search and Rescue for the Coast Guard, were in agreement that the action taken by the Master in notifying the Coast Guard was proper. Such action was approved by the Second Circuit in Miller v. Farrell Lines, 247 F. (2d) 503 at p. 505.

Page 4:

> "* * . Indeed the Coast Guard officer stated that he could not send search planes or ships because the Master had not given his course and position when reporting that Gardner was missing. * *."

This statement is erroneous and misleading. The Coast Guard officer receiving the BULKCRUDE's message at Miami that Gardner was missing was Warrant Officer Ernest E. Fuller. As to why he did not dispatch a ship or plane that night, he testified (App. p. 41 of Petition):

> "A. There are several reasons. No. 1: It was nighttime.. No. 2: There was a time element involved. They said they had last () seen the man, I believe, about six o'clock in the evening. That was in the vicinity of Tennessee Reef. This was around one, which was a period of almost seven hours later. Not having any specific point to look for a man overboard, it is impractical at night. It is hard enough to find a man in the water in the daytime, let alone at night. Therefore, there were no units dispatched to look for this man. Had we had a specific area to look for, we would have sent a plane come daylight the next morning. ." (Italics Supplied)

On cross examination this witness further testified, (Fuller dep. p. [redacted]:

> "Q. Mr. Fuller, this apparent lapse of time from the time the seaman was missed and as reported to you, does this influence your decision as to whether any air or sea search would be made?
>
> A. Well, it was considered, of course. As I said, the seven hours involved there—and if the vessel travels at a speed of 15 knots, it would be covering quite a distance. When you start trying to localize an area where the man could have been lost, that is quite a job. On the other hand, as I said, one of the biggest factors involved there would be the fact that it was dark."

Obviously the above statement in Respondent's Opposition Brief is improper. If the Coast Guard officer had been of the opinion that he could not send search planes or ships "because the Master had not given his course and position when reporting that Gardner was missing", the Coast Guard officer when asked to give his reasons why he did not dispatch a plane or ship on the night he was advised by the Master that Gardner was missing, would have said so. It is significant that no such reason was given.

Page 4:

> "*. Both of the shipowner's expert Master Mariner witnesses stated that they would have turned the ship around and retraced the course at least an hour or an hour and a half after the search revealed Gardner was not on board. **** ."

The record supports no such statement. Over objection, Petitioners' experts were asked to assume a state of facts not in this case, i.e., that Gardner was last seen a half hour or an hour before he was missed for his midnight watch. (The testimony is that he was not seen for five hours before he was missed.) Even on such assumed facts, these experts did not testify that after the search of the vessel they would turn the ship around and retrace the course as Respondent alleges. Petitioner's expert, Captain Adams, on cross, testified (Tr. p. 528):

> "Q. Then if he (Gardner) was last seen an hour beforehand, you wouldn't go out and search?
>
> A. If he was last seen an hour beforehand and there was no definite information as to the man having gone overboard, I doubt very much if I would have gone out and searched."

He further testified (Tr. p. 531):

> "Q. Let me get this straight. If he was last seen an hour beforehand, would you have gone back?
>
> A. Last seen an hour beforehand and it took an hour and a half or two hours to search the ship, I doubt it very much."

Petitioners' expert, Captain McIntyre, on cross, testified (Tr. p. 424):

> "Q. Suppose you did not see him go overboard Captain, but it was determined that he was not on the ship, what is your answer?
>
> A. My answer is to ascertain all the facts, notify the Coast Guard who have the proper search and rescue equipment. To turn the vessel about, you're going back aimlessly. You don't know where to look. Where are you going to look?

And at (Tr. p. 426):

"Q. Under the circumstances that you did not see the man go overboard, but that he could have gone overboard a few minutes or a few seconds before you could not find him?

A. Unless I had some concrete evidence as to time and position, I couldn't (wouldn't) turn the ship around to go back.

Q. Why?

A. Because you have no object in view. You don't know where you're going to look or when or where to look for the man."

These experts, as well as the Coast Guard officers, further qualified their testimony by stating that unless they knew that the man was overboard, as distinguished from missing, and they could pinpoint the time and place he went overboard, any chance of rescue would be almost impossible, especially on a dark night as it was in this case.

Page 4:

".  and World War II statistics on rescue were introduced showing that approximately 70% of men were rescued after their ships had sunk. Indeed the Coast Guard Rescue Plan showed that the probabilities of rescue within three days were excellent for a man in warm or tropical waters such as these."

The above mentioned statistics, also introduced over Petitioners' objection, involved cases where the facts were entirely different from those in the Gardner case. In those cases the men known to be overboard were equipped with life rafts, life jackets or some kind of buoyant apparatus with which to stay afloat.

Page 4:

> "The District Court dismissed the libel of Gardner's widow holding that the Master's failure to make even the slightest attempt to save the life of Gardner would not render liability unless it were shown that if the Master had made any attempts to rescue, these attempts would be successful." (Italics Supplied)

The District Court did not so hold. The District Court dismissed the libel, not because it believed it necessary to show that any attempt at rescue by the Master would have to be successful in order to render liability, but because it believed from the evidence that on the facts in this case had the Master turned back and attempted a search there would have been no reasonable possibility of success. We quote from the Opinion (App. pp. 8-9 of Petition):

> "Holding that, under the peculiar facts of this case, the master of the BULKCRUDE was not negligent in failing to reverse his course for the purpose of conducting a search, and that, in any event, there was no reasonable possibility of success and, hence, there was no causal relation between the negligence, if any, and the death, a decree will be entered dismissing the libel." (Italics Supplied).

DECISION BELOW VIOLATES McALLISTER v. UNITED STATES

Respondent, contrary to the test laid down in Harris v. Pennsylvania Railroad Company, (4 Cir.) 50 F. (2d) 866, to the effect that the duty of the ship is to use every reasonable means to save the life of a crewmember, contends without supporting evidence, that the Master did nothing for his crewman in distress (Opposition Brief, p. 6) and that the Master failed in his positive duty to rescue Gardner. The law did not impose a positive duty upon the Master to rescue Gardner, as Respondent alleges. In the Harris case, supra, where the man was known to be overboard—not missing as in this case, the Fourth Circuit held that the duty of the ship was to use every reasonable means to save him. This is a legal duty and was approved by the Court of Appeals in this case (App. p. 20 of Petition). In the Harris case the duty of search was not involved because it was known that Harris was overboard and where. Therefore, the duty there involved was that of rescue. In the instant case it was not known whether Gardner was overboard or not so that the first question which confronted the Master when advised that Gardner did not report for his midnight watch, was where is the man. The evidence is abundantly convincing (a factual issue), that had the Master turned back and attempted a search Gardner would not have been located. Therefore, the legal duty to use every reasonable means to rescue the man never arose. The Fourth Circuit admits the correctness of this principle of law in its statement that the duty of search arises when there is a reasonable possibility of rescue (App. p. 23 of Petition). Yet by reversing the District Court on the testimony of one inexperienced witness against the overwhelming testimony of seven experts whose testimony had been accepted by the District Court, the Court of Appeals has substituted its appraisal of the facts for that of the District Court sitting in admiralty. Although the evidence was overpowering in favor of Petitioners that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue, which normally would have produced an affirmance of the findings of the District Court as trier of the facts, the Fourth Circuit decreed otherwise.

From the above it is clear that there were conflicts in the evidence and that the Court of Appeals has overturned the District Court's findings of fact and substituted its own for those of the District Court, which this Court in McAllister v. United States, 348 U. S. 19, 75 S. Ct. 6, 99 L. Ed. 20, holds cannot be done.

Petitioners point out (Petition p. 16) that this Court in McAllister v. United States, supra, held that Circuit Courts are without the power to try factual issues de novo or to substitute their appraisal of the facts for that of the District Court sitting in admiralty when the District Court's findings are no cletarly erroneous. No contention was made in the amended majority opinion of the Court of Appeals, in the instant case, that the District Court's findings are clearly erroneous or that they are without evidence to support them.

It is argued (Opposition Brief p. 8) that if it should be thought that there were material conflicts in the evidence which the District Court had to resolve and make a finding on, it is clear that the Court of Appeals regarded the District Court's findings as clearly erroneous, or if such findings were supported by evidence, the Court of Appeals was left with a definite conviction that a mistake had been committed, giving them the right to reverse.

As shown above, this Court in McAllister v. United States, supra, laid down the rule (Petition p. 22) that Courts of Appeal are not to try cases of this kind de novo, and are not to substitute their opinion for that of the District Court merely because they may disagree with the decision below. The test there laid down by which the Court of Appeals may set aside the judgment of the District Court because it is clearly erroneous is that the reviewing court on the entire evidence must be left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed, and further, that in relation to the District Court's finding, this Court stands in review in the same position as the Court of Appeals.

For the reasons heretofore stated it is clear that the Court of Appeals in reversing the District Court could not and did not reach a firm conviction on the entire evidence that a mistake had been committed. To quote the language used by this Court in the McAllister case (75 S. Ct. at p. 9):

> "Certainly we cannot say on review that a judgment based upon such evidence is clearly erroneous. ***."

CONFLICT OF DECISIONS

The Petition, beginning at page 23, points out the particulars in which the decision of the Fourth Circuit in the instant case, conflicts with the decision of the Second Circuit in Miller v. Farrell Lines, supra, and the decision of the Fifth Circuit in Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp. 290 F. (2d) 310. Respondent Gardner (Opposition Brief), alleges that these cases were considered by the Court of Appeals and were not relevant to this case since they turned on their own peculiar facts and were primarily tried on grounds other than this case. The distinction advanced is without merit.

Respondent contends that the District Court's Findings of Facts and Conclusions of Law in the Barrios case show that liability was claimed in the District Court because of negligence of the ship in causing Barrios to fall overboard and that the failure to rescue doctrine was claimed for the first time in the Fifth Circuit but not seriously relied on. These efforts to show dissimilarity and likewise no conflict, between the Barrios case and the Gardner case, are baseless. The District Court's Findings of Fact that the Administratrix of Barrios' estate brought the action alleging that the death of Barrios as a result of falling from the vessel was proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant, does not rule out other negligence nor does it attempt to define the numerous acts of negligence charged against the defendant, both in the pleadings and in the evidence. The complaint (App. p. 1) specifically charged the defendant, among other things, with negligence in rescue, including failure of the vessel to turn back. The evidence (App. pp. 4, 5) deals with the reasonable possibility of rescue, the dangers Barrios encountered if he went overboard and the favorable weather existing from 3:35 A.M., when Barrios was found missing from his position as lookout, up to 6:49 that morning when heavy weather was encountered, and the reasons why the Master did not turn back and attempt a search. Indeed, the record shows that the greater part of the testimony in the District Court involved the issues of search and rescue. These issues were also definitely presented on the appeal (App. pp. 6, 7) and are spelled out in the brief for Appellant Barrios, under the caption "Questions Involved On Appeal and Specification of Errors".

Respondent's attempt (Opposition Brief p. 10), to distinguish Miller v. Farrell Lines, Inc., supra, certiorari denied 355 U. S. 912, from the instant case is likewise ineffective. Nothing here said by Respondent Gardner destroys the reasons given by Petitioners (Petition p. 23), why the decision of the Fourth Circuit in this case does not conflict with the decision of the Second Circuit in the Miller case. The suicidal phase of the Miller case did not destroy the theory of failure to rescue, as suggested by the Fourth Circuit. It merely added one more speculation to the long list of speculations which the Second Circuit held were not sufficient upon which to impose liability upon the shipowner. The fact that some search was made in Miller but discontinued as soon as darkness came on, supports Petitioners' contention that the District Court's conclusion that there would have been no reasonable possibility of rescuing Gardner had the Master turned back and attempted a search, was correct. Furthermore, in the Miller case the Second Circuit held that the plaintiff had the burden of showing that the seaman was alive and could have been rescued if due diligence to save him had been used by the defendant. The decision of the Fifth Circuit in the Barrios case is to the same effect. The Fourth Circuit in the Gardner case places this burden on the shipowner, thereby coming in direct conflict with both the Second Circuit and the Fifth Circuit. Such action by the Fourth Circuit results in the Circuits being in conflict in applying proper principles and standards and calls for review by this Court, pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 19.

The decision of the Fourth Circuit, after approving the Harris case that it is for the jury to decide whether the man could have been saved if due diligence had been used (Petition p. 10), on the testimony of one witness whose testimony was not accepted by the District Court as against seven witnesses whose testimony was so accepted, has reversed the District Court's finding of fact that there would have been no reasonable possibility of rescue had the Master turned back and attempted a search. It is inconsistent for the Fourth Circuit to cite with approval cases holding that it is for the jury to decide whether there was a reasonable possibility of rescue and in the same case disregard the jury's (Court's) finding that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue and reverse the District Court. The law does not require the Master to attempt a vain undertaking, yet the Fourth Circuit has held him negligent because he did not turn back and attempt a search when there was no reasonable possibility of rescue.

In summary, the legal duty on the ship to use reasonable means to rescue the seaman overboard, as established in Harris v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra, and other cases cited by Respondent, never arose in this case where the evidence satisfied the trier of the facts, that for the reasons shown, there would have been no reasonable possibility of rescue had the Master turned back and attempted a search. The Fourth Circuit admits the correctness of this rule of law but has refused to follow it. In its amended majority opinion (App. p. 23 of Petition), it said:

> "*. It was less than a duty to rescue him, but it was a positive duty to make a sincere attempt at rescue. *. The duty arises when there is a reasonable possibility of rescue. *." (Italics Supplied)

A reversal by the Court of Appeals of the fact findings of the District Court, overwhelmingly supported by the evidence, including the testimony of Captain Ing, Respondent Gardner's expert from the Coast Guard on search and rescue, whose testimony, aside from reference thereto in the dissenting opinion of Judge Haynsworth, has yet to be mentioned either by the Court of Appeals or by Respondent, conflicts with the decision of this Court in McAllister v. United States, supra. For the reasons heretofore advanced and more fully dealt with in Petitioners' Petition, the decision of the Fourth Circuit in this case also conflicts with the decision of the Second Circuit in Miller v. Farrell Lines, supra, and with the decision of the Fifth Circuit in Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corp. supra.

CONCLUSION

Petitioners respectfully submit that a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., ET AL,
PETITIONERS

R. ARTHUR JETT
ROY L. SYKES
R. ARTHUR JETT, JR.
Counsel for Petitioners

JETT, SYKES & COUPLAND
701 Citizens Bank Building
Norfolk 10, Virginia

APPENDIX

COMPLAINT

Filed Sept. 29, 1959.

United States District Court

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA,
TAMPA DIVISION.

No. 3723

DIGNA BARRIOS, as administratrix of the Estate of Mario Barrios, deceased,

Plaintiff,

versus

WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION

Defendant.

Plaintiff, by and through her undersigned attorneys, complaining of the defendant, Waterman Steamship Corporation, respectfully alleges:

1. The plaintiff has duly qualified as the administratrix of the estate of Mario Barrios, deceased, and has been granted letters of administration in the County Judge's Court, Hillsborough County, Florida, on the 28th day of September, 1959.

2. The defendant is a corporation with an office in Tampa, Hillsborough County, Florida, and the defendant corporation does transact business in Tampa, Hillsborough County, Florida.

3. At all times hereinafter mentioned, the above named defendant owned and operated a certain vessel known as the "Topa Topa".

4. The deceased, Mario Barrios, was at all times hereinafter mentioned in the employ of the defendant on board the vessel "Topa Topa" as an able seaman.

5. Between approximately 2:55 A.M. and 3:35 A. M. on the 18th day of December, 1957, the decedent was standing watch on the bow of the said vessel in the course of his duties, within the scope of his employment, and while the said vessel was en route from Japan to the United States, when he fell from the vessel and subsequently disappeared and lost his life.

6. The defendant, its officers, agents or employees knew or should have known that the deceased had fallen overboard from the vessel yet the defendant was negligent in the performance of its duty to use care to rescue the deceased.

7. As a direct result of the negligence of the defendant, as hereinbefore and hereinafter alleged, the deceased lost his life.

8. The negligence of the defendant, through its servants, agents and employees, in addition to that hereinabove alleged, consisted of,

(a) failing to turn the vessel to ascertain decedent's whereabouts;

(b) failing to promptly advise other vessels, aircraft or other rescue agencies of decedent's disappearance;

(c) failing to promptly take any other steps to ascertain decedent's whereabouts and rescue him from his peril;

(d) failing to provide a reasonably safe place for decedent to perform his duties;

(e) failing to provide the vessel and decedent with a sufficient number of competent co-employees and superior officers and in that the co-employees and superior officers supplied were negligent;

(f) failing to provide decedent with a seaworthy vessel;

(g) other acts of carelessness and negligence which resulted in the death of plaintiff's decedent.

10. Prior to his death, decedent was a young, strong, ablebodied man earning a good wage, and deceased did contribute to the support of his mother and planned to continue such contributions in the sum of Two Thousand Five Hundred And No/100 ($2,500.00) Dollars per year; that due solely to the negligence of the defendant and its officers, agents, servants, workmen and employees as aforesaid, the mother of the deceased has been deprived of the continuing contributions from her son.

Wherefore, plaintiff elects to maintain this action under the provisions of Section 33 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, 46 U. S. Code 688, commonly called the Jones Act, 46 U.S.C.A., 688, and demands judgment against the defendant in a sum greater than Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars.

Plaintiff requests and elects a trial by jury.

LA PORTE & DE LA PARTE,
By RAYMOND La PARTE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff,

308 Tampa Street,
Tampa 2, Florida

Testimony of Captain Wallace Royal, Master of the Steamship "Topa Topa" Given Before the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Tampa, Florida, May 16, 1960, In the Case of Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corporation, As Copied From the Transcript of the Record on Appeal to the United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit.

Page 25:

"Q. The visibility was good at four o'clock?

A. The visibility was good, yes sir.

Q. Now, subsequently, you determined some gale force wind and low visibility, is that correct?

A. Afterwards, yes sir.

Q. At what time did you encounter that?

A. At 6:49.

Q. Now, up until 6:49 would you have had full control of the vessel and able to turn it to bow at 180 degrees turn?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Up until 6:49?

A. Yes sir.

* * * *

Page 38:

Q. From your investigation of the situation it was discovered by Cleveland L. Farnham at 3:35 that he was not on duty?

A. He wasn't up there when he went on duty at 3:35. That is what he said.

* * * *

Page 59:

Q. Did you send numerous radio messages at nine o'clock when you heard of the loss of Mario Barrios to the Japanese Coast Guard?

A. We sent a general message, an urgent message, which was picked up by all ships within our range reporting him missing and giving the area where we assumed he was lost in, reporting him missing and to keep a sharp lookout for him.

Q. The purpose was to assist in his rescue, was it not?

A. To keep a lookout for him. They would naturally pick him up. That is the rule of the sea, if they saw him.

IN THE

United States Court of Appeals

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 18,561

DIGNA BARRIOS, As Administratrix of the estate of Mario Barrios, deceased,

Appellant,

VERSUS

WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION,

Appellee.

BRIEF FOR APPELLANT

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The appellant was the plaintiff below. The appellee was the defendant below. In the briefs the parties will be referred to as they stood in the trial court, and the symbol "R" shall be used for "Record on Appeal."

Digna Barrios, as administratrix of the estate of Mario Barrios, deceased, the plaintiff, filed her complaint in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, charging that the Waterman Steamship Corporation negligently contributed to the loss of the life of Mario Barrios, son of the plaintiff, and a seaman serving on a vessel owned by the defendant at the time of the loss of his life. The specific act of negligence alleged was that:

"The defendant, its officers, agents or employees knew or should have known that the deceased had fallen overboard from the vessel yet the defendant was negligent in the performance of its duty to use care to rescue the deceased."

In addition the plaintiff charged the defendant with the following acts of negligence:

(a) failing to turn the vessel to ascertain decedent's whereabouts;

(b) failing to promptly advise other vessels, aircraft or other rescue agencies of decedent's disappearance;

(c) failing to promptly take any other steps to ascertain decedent's whereabouts and rescue him from his peril;

(d) failing to provide a reasonably safe place for decedent to perform his duties;

(e) failing to provide the vessel and decedent with a sufficient number of competent co-employees and superior officers and in that the co-employees and superior officers supplied were negligent;

(f) failing to provide decedent with a seaworthy vessel;

(g) other acts of carelessness and negligence which resulted in the death of plaintiff's decedent."

"Questions Involved On Appeal And Specifications Of Errors", Shown on Page 10 of Brief for Appellant, Filed With the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in Barrios v. Waterman Steamship Corporation.

Question One: Whether or not under the undisputed facts of this case the defendant was negligent in failing to attempt to rescue the deceased and whether or not said negligence contributed in whole or in part to the death of the deceased.

Question Two: Whether or not under the undisputed facts of this case it was the burden of the defendant to prove that proper and timely rescue efforts would have been useless in saving the deceased.

Errors of the Court:

1. In failing to find that the negligence of the defendant contributed in whole or in part to the death of Mario Barrios.

2. In holding that the plaintiff must prove that the negligence must be the proximate cause of the death of the deceased.

Office-Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 15 1963
JOHN F. DAVIS, CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1962

No. 711

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., In personam,
and the SS BULKCRUDE, In rem,

Petitioners,

v.

MRS. VALERIE JEAN GARDNER, As Administratrix of the Estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., Deceased,

Respondent.

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

R. ARTHUR JETT
ROY L. SYKES
R. ARTHUR JETT, JR.
Counsel for Petitioners

JETT, SYKES & COUPLAND
701 Citizens Bank Building
Norfolk 10, Virginia

INDEX

	Page
Reasons For Granting Rehearing and Issuing The Writ	2
Conclusion	11
Certificate of Counsel	11

CITATIONS

Gallick v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., February 19, 1963, issue of The United States LAW WEEK, page 4182	2, 3, 6
Harris v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 50 Fed. (2d) 866	3
McAllister v. United States, (1954) 348 U. S., 19, 75 S. Ct. 6	4
Sadler v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 159 Fed. (2d) 784	3

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1962

No. 711

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., In personam,
and the SS BULKCRUDE, In rem,

Petitioners,

v.

MRS. VALERIE JEAN GARDNER, As Administratrix of the Estate of Robert Edward Gardner, Jr., Deceased,

Respondent.

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

National Bulk Carriers, Inc., et al, petitioners, pray that this Court grant rehearing of its order of February 18, 1963, denying their petition for certiorari, and that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in the above entitled case as prayed for in the petition filed January 2, 1963, herein.

Reasons For Granting Rehearing And Issuing The Writ

In the light of the decision of this Court in Gallick v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., decided February 18, 1963, (unreported so far as petitioners are advised except in the issue dated February 19, 1963, of The United States LAW WEEK p. 4182) petitioners submit that the decision of the Fourth Circuit in this case has improperly invaded the functions of the trier of the facts in this Jones Act case.

Fully cognizant of the small percentage of petitions for rehearing granted, petitioners file this petition with the firm conviction that in view of the expressions of this Court in Gallick v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., supra, not decided when petitioners' petition for a writ of certiorari was filed, the functions of the trier of the facts in the instant case have been improperly invaded and completely overthrown by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

The administratrix of Gardner's estate elected to bring this action on the admiralty side of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Norfolk, thereby waiving the right to a jury trial available had it been brought on the civil side, and prayed that the case be heard and determined by the Trial Judge sitting as trier of the facts.

During a week, or thereabouts, of arduous and extensive examination of the witnesses, both direct and cross, expert and otherwise, the Trial Judge heard the testimony, and, with few exceptions, saw the witnesses and had an opportunity to observe their demeanor while testifying. Given the opportunity furnished him by Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to judge the credibility of the witnesses and observe their demeanor, the trier of the facts in this case made the finding that there was no reasonable possibility of rescue and no causal relation between the alleged negligence of the ship and the seaman's death.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in Harris v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 50 Fed. (2d) 866, ruled that the question of reasonable possibility of rescue, as well as the question of causation, was for the trier of the facts. In Sadler v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 159 Fed. (2d) 784, it again stated that this was the proper rule of law in such cases. However, after citing Harris v. Pennsylvania Railroad Company with approval, in the next breath the Fourth Circuit in the instant case overthrows the findings of the trier of the facts, overwhelmingly supported by the evidence and arbitrarily substitutes its own finding of fact when not supported by the weight of the evidence. Such a manipulation of the fact findings of the trier of the facts, which, at respondent Gardner's election, was the District Court rather than a jury, is a direct invasion by the Fourth Circuit of the function of the trier of the facts so vigorously condemned by this Court in Gallick v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., supra, not decided and not mentioned in the petition for a writ of certiorari heretofore filed with this Court in this case.

In Gallick v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., supra, Mr. Justice White, speaking for this Court, said:

"This Court granted certiorari, 369 U. S. 848, > to consider the questions of whether the decision below improperly invaded the jury's function."

Identical questions for this Court's consideration exist in the instant case. If it was proper to grant certiorari in Gallick, where the question was whether the decision below invaded the jury's function, is it not equally proper to grant certiorari in this case where the question at issue is whether the decision below improperly invaded the functions of the Trial Court sitting as trier of the facts at the election of respondent?

In McAllister v. United States, (1954) 348 U. S., 19, 75 S.Ct. 6, this Court, at page 8, Supreme Court Reporter, said:

> ". In reviewing a judgment of a trial court, sitting without a jury in admiralty, the Court of Appeals may not set aside the judgment below unless it is clearly erroneous. No greater scope of review is exercised by the appellate tribunals in admiralty cases than they exercise under Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U. S. C.A., (Citing cases)."

Further in the Gallick case Mr. Justice White, speaking for this Court, at page 4183 of The United States LAW WEEK, said:

> "We think that the Court of Appeals improperly invaded the function and province of the jury in this Federal Employers Liability Act case. . We hold that the record shows sufficient evidence to warrant the jury's conclusion that petitioner's injuries were caused by the acts or omissions of respondent."

In the Gardner case the record, when read, reveals the overpowering testimony of seven of the eight witnesses testifying as to the duty of search and probability of rescue, based on the facts there involved, that had the master of the ship turned back and attempted a search there would have been no reasonable possibility of rescue. The trier of the facts, upon hearing these witnesses testify, concluded therefrom that on the conditions confronting the master of the BULKCRUDE on the night in question, there would have been no reasonable possibility of locating and rescuing Gardner had the ship turned back and attempted a search, and that the action of the master of the BULKCRUDE in promptly notifying the Coast Guard that Gardner was missing, following which the Coast Guard notified all shipping in the area to keep on the lookout for this missing man, was the proper action for the master to take, that he was not negligent in failing to reverse his course for the purpose of conducting a search, and that, in any event, there was no reasonable possibility of success and, hence, there was no causal relation between the negligence, if any, and the death. For these reasons a decree was entered dismissing the libel.

The Fourth Circuit, without expressing an opinion as to why it did not agree with the witnesses testifying both for petitioners and respondent, including the two neutral Coast Guard officers, leading experts on search and rescue, one who testified for petitioners and the other for respondent, in flagrant disregard of the weight of the evidence and the finding below, concluded that there would have been a reasonable possibility of rescue had the master of the BULKCRUDE turned back and attempted a search. Petitioners submit that such action by the Circuit Court of Appeals was a direct invasion of the functions of the trier of tthe facts and in direct conflict with the views of this Court as just announced in Gallick v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., supra.

This Court in Gallick stresses the importance of having the issue of causation decided by the trier of the facts. In Gardner, where such a determination had been made in favor of the shipowner, it should have the same weight as if it had been in favor of the libellant suing as administratrix of an allegedly deceased seaman. Any different holding would be a violation of the shipowners right to due process of law. The right to approval of a jury determination or the determination of a District Court sitting as trier of the facts, is equally as sacred and precious to the shipowner as it is to the seaman or to the railroad worker.

In Gallick, at page 4184, LAW WEEK, Mr. Justice White quotes from Tennant v. Peoria & P.U.R. Co., 321 U. S. 29, where this Court granted certiorari "because of important problems as to petitioner's right to a jury determination of the issue of causation," as follows:

> "It is not the function of a court to search the record for conflicting circumstantial evidence in order to take the case away from the jury on a theory that the proof gives equal support to inconsistent and uncertain inferences. The focal point of judicial review is the reasonableness of the particular inference or conclusion drawn by the jury. It is the jury, not the court, which is the fact-finding body. It weighs the contradictory evidence and inferences, judges the credibility of witnesses, receives expert instructions, and draws the ultimate > conclusion as to the facts. The very essence of its function is to select from among conflicting inferences and conclusions that which it considers most reasonable. Washington & Georgetown R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 571, 572; Tiller v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., supra, 68; Bailey v. Central Vermont Ry., 319 U.S. 350, 353, 354. That conclusion, whether it relates to negligence, causation or any other factual matter, cannot be ignored. Courts are not free to reweigh the evidence and set aside the jury verdict merely because the jury could have drawn different inferences or conclusions or because judges feel that other results are more reasonable. 321 U. S., at 35."

The conclusion of the fact finding body as to negligent causation or any other factual matter, cannot, under the decisions of this Court, be ignored as has been done by the Fourth Circuit in the instant case. The Court of Appeals in Gardner has completely usurped the functions of the fact-finding body. Such action constitutes a flagrant violation of the views of this Court as just expressed in Gallick. The Fourth Circuit in Gardner has charged petitioners with relying on certain deductions which in reality were never relied on, apparently because the majority of its members had not studied the record. Unless certiorari is granted and petitioners are given an opportunity to point out these errors to this Court, such errors, like those appearing in the first opinion of the Fourth Circuit in this case, which that Court later ordered stricken from the reported decisions, will never be passed upon by this Court.

In Gallick this Court cites numerous decisions reversing Courts of Appeals when such courts have reversed a jury decision in favor of a plaintiff or libellant. The reasoning behind such reversals, if justice is to prevail, must apply with the same force and effect to cases in which Courts of Appeals have reversed the decisions of the fact finder in favor of the defendant or respondent. This Court has repeatedly stated that issues of fact and issues of causation are for the trier of the facts. If such be true, then the determination thereof in favor of a shipowner must be given the same weight as were it in favor of a seaman. Anything different constitutes a flagrant violation of due process of law.

If the Court of Appeals can ignore the decision of the trier of the facts and the testimony of the witnesses that support it, as has been done by the Fourth Circuit in the Gardner case, the vital functions of the jury or the District Court sitting as trier of the facts in admiralty will have little or no meaning.

If the Court of Appeals can completely disregard the testimony of two outstanding neutral witnesses whose testimony was accepted by the trier of the facts, without so much as mentioning either their names or their testimony, the basic safeguards of our legal system are in jeopardy.

If the Court of Appeals can allege charges of negligence against a defendant or respondent never once argued before the trier of the facts, an obvious usurpation of that body's vital function has taken place.

To one familiar with the record, it is obvious that the Court of Appeals in utter disregard of the testimony and of the findings of the District Court as trier of the facts reached its own conclusion that liability should be imposed on petitioners. In so doing, the Fourth Circuit in its first opinion went so far as to accuse the master of the BULKCRUDE of failing to correct an obviously correct Coast Guard message. This unjust accusation of negligence was further accentuated by the Fourth Circuit in its allegations that petitioners relied on several premises for their defense, which allegations were not only wholly incorrect but indeed the premises on which they were based never existed. It is understandable how a Court of Appeals might misinterpret testimony but it is not understandable how that same Court could condemn a respondent for allegedly advancing a defense based on a premise which so far as this case is concerned never has or never will exist.

If this Court's decision in Gallick is to be applied to plaintiffs and defendants alike, this Court must grant petitioners' request for certiorari. Only in this manner will petitioners be given an opportunity to point out why the testimony in this case so overwhelmingly supports the decision of the District Court as the fact-finder, and also point out other errors which have been committed by the Fourth Circuit in the Gardner case.

Petitioners are fully aware that this Court does not have the time to review the record of all cases in which certiorari is sought, but there comes a time that only by a study of the record can justice be done. Unless certiorari is granted in this case this Court will never have the opportunity to review the record or have the errors of the Circuit Court of Appeals fully explained. As in Gallick, this Court should grant certiorari to consider the question of whether the decision below improperly invaded the fact-finder's functions.

The decision in this case will affect shipping and seamen the nation over and is by no means limited to just the litigants here involved. Indeed other shipping interests have already indicated a desire to file briefs as amicus curiae if so allowed.

We believe that this Court should grant certiorari in order that it may thereby consider the usurpation by the Fourth Circuit in this case of the basic functions of the trier of the facts and allow petitioners to point out where the weight of the testimony lies and what caused the District Court as fact-finder to reach the conclusion it did reach. It is, we submit, obvious that the Fourth Circuit, beginning with its first and now discarded opinion, either has not fully familiarized itself with the testimony or has deliberately refused to be bound by the weight of the evidence which, pursuant to the conclusion of this Court in the Gallick case, constituted an improper invasion of the fact-finder's functions.

Unless a writ of certiorari is granted to review the decision of the Fourth Circuit, the many misconceptions and errors committed by that Court will never be brought to light or errors prejudicial to petitioners corrected.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above and in the petition for writ of certiorari, it is respectfully urged that rehearing be granted and that, upon such rehearing, a writ of certiorari issue to the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Respectfully submitted,

NATIONAL BULK CARRIERS, INC., et al
PETITIONERS

R. ARTHUR JETT
ROY L. SYKES
R. ARTHUR JETT, JR.
Counsel for Petitioners

JETT, SYKES & COUPLAND
701 Citizens Bank Building
Norfolk 10, Virginia

CERTIFICATE OF COUNSEL

I hereby certify that the foregoing petition for rehearing is presented in good faith and not for delay and is restricted to grounds specified in Rule 58 of the rules of this Court.

R. ARTHUR JETT
Of Counsel for Petitioners